Of the Hospital Community and Family Health Services[2] total, expenditure on drugs accounts for 11.5 per cent., 4 per cent. accounts for NHS management costs and 1 per cent. accounts for the NHS research and development Levy[3].

Information on remuneration is not yet available on remuneration of medically-qualified staff for 1999–2000 but in 1998–99 remuneration for medical staff accounted for 13.1 per cent. of the Hospital, Community and Family Health Services total of £39 billion.

Notes:

1. Hospital, Community and Family Health Services include NHS hospitals, community health, family health services and related services and NHS trusts.

2. Central Health and Miscellaneous Services includes the Welfare Food Scheme, EEA medical costs, expenditure on medical, scientific and technical services predominately on the Public Health Laboratory Service Board, the National Biological Standards Board, the Microbiological Research Authority and the National Radiological Protection Board.

3. The NHS R&D programme provides the evidence base to help with clinical excellence, better quality services and the formulation of policy. R&D programmes also continue to trial and test medical advances and service innovation and to evaluate much recent policy innovation to ensure that good practice is shared and barriers to implementation are overcome.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total budget of the NHS in the current financial year, expressed in pounds per head of the population; and what the corresponding figures are for (a) the Netherlands, (b) Belgium, (c) France and (d) Germany. [105990]

Mr. Denham: Gross total NHS expenditure in England is forecast to be £43,049 million in 1999–2000. This is £868 per head of population. The equivalent UK figures are £52,645 million and £887 per head. It is not possible to provide similar comparisons to this figure for Belgium, Netherlands, France and Germany because the data are not available.

The latest comparable data are produced by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). The table gives public and total healthcare expenditure in dollars per capita for the countries quoted above. All figures are for 1997.

It should be emphasised that figures for the different countries are not strictly comparable because of the different definitions of health spending, for example where the boundary between health and social care is drawn.

Expenditure per head: $PPP 1997

Country	Public healthcare expenditure per head of population ($PPP [1])	Total healthcare expenditure per head of population ($PPP)
UK	1,177	1,391
France	1,520	2,047
Germany	1,822	2,364
Netherlands	1,404	1,933
Belgium	1,549	1,768

Death Rates (Suicides and Accidents)

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the death rate from (a) suicide and (b) serious injury from accidents by 2010. [106160]

Mr. Hutton: The development of strategies to reduce suicide and serious injury from accidents are a major part of the Government's programme outlined in the White Paper "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation". The National Service Framework for Mental Health sets a specific standard for health and social services to prevent suicides. The forthcoming National Service Framework for Older People will include a section on the prevention of falls.

A high level national Task Force on accidents, accountable to the Chief Medical Officer, will be appointed shortly to ensure that the essential groundwork is in place to targets on accident prevention set out in the White Paper. In addition, we are in the process of bringing together the necessary expertise to work across Government to drive forward a whole range of initiatives to make progress towards achieving the targets to reduce suicide. We also provide funding for voluntary groups to support specific initiatives in both areas.

Folic Acid

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he proposes to consult on the practical and legislative implications of the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition into the universal fortification of flour with folic acid. [106206]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The report, "Folic Acid and the Prevention of Disease", from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy considered the public health implications of fortification. A public consultation will be undertaken shortly inviting comments on the report's conclusions. Ministers will take into account the views expressed before deciding on policy.

Psychiatric Beds

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many 24 hour-staffed beds for people with severe and enduring mental illness there are in each health authority in England; and how many there were in each of the last three years. [106751]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested has been collected centrally only since 1998–99. The following are the numbers of 24 hour staffed beds for people with a mental illness in each health authority in England for 1998–99 and the first two quarters in 1999–2000. In those authorities where centrally collected data show no beds, developments are taking place locally to provide care in appropriate settings.

Consultants (Suspensions and Dismissals)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS consultants in England have been dismissed on (a) clinical and (b) other grounds, in each of the last three years. [106538]

Mr. Denham: Disciplinary action is the responsibility of local National Health Service employers. Information on NHS staff who have been dismissed is not collected centrally, but may be obtained from individual NHS employers.

Wheelchairs (North-West)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average length of the waiting list for an electrically powered (a) indoor and outdoor and (b) indoor NHS wheelchair in the North West; [106471]

(2) how many additional electric powered (a) indoor and outdoor and (b) indoor NHS wheelchairs will be made available in the North West for the year 1999–2000; [106474]

(3) what is the waiting time for electrically powered (a) indoor and outdoor and (b) indoor NHS wheelchairs in the North West; [106473]

(4) how many electrically powered (a) indoor and (b) indoor and outdoor NHS wheelchairs there are in the North West. [106472]

Mr. Hutton: The current forecast, at Q2, is that 398 electrically powered indoor and outdoor wheelchairs will be available in the North West for 1999–2000, compared with a year end figure of 331 for 1998–99.

Other information is not readily available on a regional basis. The following figures relate to North West Lancashire Health Authority area:

Forty-two electrically powered indoor and outdoor wheelchairs and 97 indoor National Health Service wheelchairs (including outdoor powered, attendant controlled NHS wheelchairs) will be made available to new recipients in 1999–2000.

There are currently 277 indoor (plus 17 outdoor, attendant controlled) and 98[1] indoor/outdoor electrically powered wheelchairs in North West Lancashire.

Nineteen people are awaiting home or clinic assessment for electrically powered wheelchairs and 41 for indoor NHS and outdoor attendant controlled, electrically powered wheelchairs.

The present waiting times for electrically powered indoor and outdoor and indoor NHS wheelchairs are 12 weeks and 40 weeks respectively.

[1] Figure does not include all wheelchairs available for 1999- 2000.

Cancer Services

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to audit the Calman-Hine recommendations on the organisation of cancer services; [106123]

(2) what role the Commission for Health Improvement will play in the implementation of the Calman-Hine recommendations. [106124]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 24 January 2000]: We are committed to improving the quality of cancer services through the implementation of the "Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services" (the Calman/Hine report) and subsequent evidence-based guidance.

The National Health Service Executive is currently developing national standards and performance indicators, based on the Calman/Hine report and guidance, which will be used by providers, commissioners and regional offices to deliver and measure continuous quality improvement in a consistent manner across the country within a national quality management framework. The NHS Executive will shortly be consulting on the draft standards and performance indicators prior to national roll-out from April 2000.

We have asked the Commission for Health Improvement to conduct a national review of the implementation of Calman/Hine as one of its first major tasks when it begins work in April.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to his oral statement of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 702, where the additional intensive treatment unit beds provided this year have been made available. [106807]

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals in which the new intensive care beds referred to by him in his oral statement of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 702, are located. [106443]

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secrertary of State for Health if he will publish a list of the locations of the 100 additional intensive care beds which he has provided. [106205]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 24 January 2000]: We will publish this information in due course.

Hearing Aids

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend access to digital hearing aids to those who are hard of hearing and who have additional impairment of other faculties. [106451]

Mr. Hutton: We will be starting a project in England later this year to trial digital hearing aids for National Health Service patients. This project will help inform our plans to modernise hearing aid services. We anticipate that the project will cover 20 hearing aid departments and that an estimated 20–30,000 patients will benefit from the scheme. Ultimately, the project will lead to improvements for all NHS patients.

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timescale is for the completion of the review by the NHS executive working group on hearing aid services; and if he will place a copy of the report of the working groups in the Library. [106834]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 25 January 2000]: The working group established by the National Health Service Executive was set up to identify areas for development in hearing aid services. There are no plans to publish a report of this work.

We will be starting a project in England later in the year to trial digital hearing aids for NHS patients. The pilot project will help inform our plans to modernise hearing aid services. We anticipate that the project will cover 20 hearing aid departments and that an estimated 20–30,000 patients will benefit from the scheme. Ultimately, the project will lead to improvements for all NHS patients.

NHS Direct

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what means and from what sources nurses have been recruited for NHS Direct. [106785]

Ms Stuart: Nurses wanting to apply to NHS Direct find that this is no different from applying for any job elsewhere in the National Health Service. Many of the jobs are advertised in the Nursing Times and Nursing Standard as well as local papers, job centres, NHS trust newsletters and bulletin boards. NHS Direct has deliberately recruited nurses from a wide range of different backgrounds. Some will be from a hospital background but others will be from primary care or will have been working outside the NHS. NHS Direct has also provided opportunities for disabled and work-injured nurses. Many staff who work for NHS Direct do so on a part time basis allowing them to combine working for NHS Direct with other clinical duties.

NHS Funding

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations his Department has received about alternative arrangements for funding the NHS. [106544]

Mr. Denham: The Department receives many representations about alternative arrangements for funding the National Health Service. All suggestions received are considered on their merit and it remains the Government's policy that the NHS should be funded through public expenditure.

NHS Pay

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the offer to professional NHS staff not covered by the Pay Review Body was lower than that for staff covered by the Pay Review Body. [106840]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 January 2000]: The pay increases recommended by the independent review bodies reflected the particular circumstances of their remit groups. The pay of professional staff in the National Health Service not covered by the review bodies is negotiated in the Whitley Councils. For 1999–2000 higher offers have been made to some non-review groups in recognition of their particular recruitment and retention difficulties.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the overall increase in the pay bill for NHS professional staff not covered by the Pay Review Body awards and instead covered by that part of the offer on long-term pay specified for April 2000. [106838]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 January 2000]: The increase, for 2000–01, currently on offer to those staff within the National Health Service, but not covered by the Review Bodies, is 3.25 per cent. or £300, whichever is the higher. Overall it is estimated that this will add £210 million to their paybill.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the overall increase in the pay bill for NHS staff covered by the Pay Review Body following the awards announced on 17 January. [106837]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 January 2000]: Following the full implementation of the Review Bodies' recommendations on pay, it is estimated that an additional £570 million will be added to the paybill of those National Health Service staff directly covered by these awards during 2000–01.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much it would cost to pay all professional NHS staff not covered by the Pay Review Body the difference between the 3.4 per cent. offered to nursing staff and professions allied to medicine covered by the Pay Review Body and the 3.25 per cent. offered to staff not covered by the Pay Review Body. [106841]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 January 2000]: To pay all non-Review Body staff an additional 0.15 per cent. would add an estimated £10 million to the National Health Service paybill next year.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a decision on expanding Pay Review Body coverage to all professional NHS staff will be made. [106839]

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to include other NHS staff within the Pay Review Body that covers dentists, doctors and nurses. [106574]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 January 2000]: Proposals to modernise the National Health Service pay system set out in "Agenda for Change" include bringing some smaller groups of highly qualified staff within the scope of the Nurses and professions allied to medicine Pay Review Body, without changing its fundamentally professional character. This issue is part of continuing discussions with NHS Unions aimed at reaching agreement by summer 2000.

Generic Drugs

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent (a) the availability of generic drugs has improved and (b) the Category D List has decreased; and if he will make a statement on the impact of such changes on such drugs' overall cost to the NHS since August 1999; and if he will make a statement. [106871]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 25 January 2000]: There are some indications that the supply situation for generic drugs is easing. The number of drugs on the Category D list—and therefore regarded, under the existing reimbursement system, as being in short supply—has fallen in the last three months. The position since August 1999 is shown in the table.

The cost of generic drugs to the National Health Service is continuing to rise, though the rate of increase is slowing down. On 21 December last year we announced additional in-year funding of £90 million to help the NHS manage the pressures from generic prices on health authority budgets.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of cases of (a) salmonella enteritidis, (b) other strains of salmonella and (c) e.coli-type infections in each (i) region and (ii) nation of the United Kingdom, and (iii) in total, in each year since 1994. [106708]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 25 January 2000]: Information on the numbers of cases of Salmonella and E.coli O157 infections within England and Wales is collected by the Public Health Laboratory Service. The tables detail (a) numbers of Salmonella enteritidis (b) numbers of E.coli O157 reported to the PHLS Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre and Laboratory of Enteric Pathogens by year and NHS Region since 1994.

Data on other strains of Salmonella are not routinely produced.

Health Service (Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) intensive care beds and (b) general hospital beds there were in (i) East Somerset and (ii) Somerset in each year from 1980; what is the latest available estimate in each case; and if he will make a statement; [106766]

(2) if he will estimate the number of intensive care beds per head of population in (a) each English county and (b) Somerset Health Authority for each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [106740]

Mr. Denham: Information on the average daily number of beds by ward type for each National Health Service trust is published annually in "Bed Availability and Occupancy, England" and is available in the Library. The latest information is for 1997–98. As wards classified as 'intensive care' can also contain other types of beds we have piloted a new census focusing specifically on adult intensive care and high dependency beds. We will publish the results in due course.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been on hospital waiting lists in (a) East Somerset and (b) Somerset in each year since 1992, giving figures on a quarterly basis since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [106767]

Mr. Denham: Information on waiting lists is published monthly (quarterly before April 1998) and is available in the Library.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of hospital operations in East Somerset Health Authority (a) postponed and (b) postponed solely at the discretion of the authority, in each quarter since 1995. [106741]

Mr. Denham: Information on the number of operations cancelled for non medical reasons on the day patients are due to arrive or after arrival in hospital is published quarterly and is available in the Library.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of (a) nurses and (b) doctors working for each Somerset health authority for each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [106742]

Mr. Denham: Information on National Health Service manpower is published annually in the Department of Health Medical and Dental Workforce census, the Department of Health Non-Medical Workforce Census and the General and Personal Medical Services Statistics for England and Wales which are available in the Library.

Milk Tokens

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the 9 per cent. levy against retailers in respect of milk tokens sent to the Welfare Food Reimbursement Unit. [106967]

Yvette Cooper: The Welfare Food Scheme is currently under review and the nine per cent. levy will form part of that review. Any proposals for change to the scheme will be subject to Parliamentary approval.

Accident and Emergency Departments (Barnet)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total costs of funding the accident and emergency departments within the Barnet Health Authority area in each of the last five years. [106873]

Ms Stuart: The table contains information on the purchase of accident and emergency healthcare by Barnet Health Authority for the financial years 1994–95 to 1998–99.

Barnet Health Authority purchase of healthcare: Accident and Emergency 1994–95 to 1998–99

Financial year	Total expenditure (£)
1995–96	4,605,000
1996–97	4,816,000
1997–98	4,184,000
1998–99	6,141,000

Diabetes

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make needles and re-usable pens for the treatment of diabetes available free on prescription. [106964]

Mr. Denham: We have consulted on proposals which would include allowing insulin pen needles and reusable pens to be prescribed by general practitioners on the National Health Service. We have received representations from most of the organisations consulted. We are considering them, and are seeking clarification on certain points before we make our final decisions.

NHS Staff (Employment Contract Renewals)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) NHS medical staff, (b) NHS staff who were members of professions allied to medicine and (c) NHS nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff did not have their contract of employment renewed in each NHS region, in each year since 1995. [106679]

Mr. Denham: Information on National Health Service staff who have not had their contract of employment renewed is not collected centrally, but may be obtained from individual NHS employers.

Health Spending (Southend)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the impact of Southend borough council's SSA on health spending; and if he will make a statement on the recent meeting between hon. Members, councillors, officers and the Minister of State. [107269]

Mr. Hutton: I met representatives of Southend borough council and hon. Members from Southend on 10 January where they outlined the local situation with regard to their SSA. The meeting mainly discussed the financial difficulties the local authority is facing particularly with regard to mental health and learning disability client groups. I am currently considering whether there is any underspend in this year's mental health care grant which may provide additional support to the borough council. I agreed to examine what extra assistance the social services inspectorate could provide to support the authority.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the question tabled for answer on 8 December by the hon. Member for Walthamstow relating to the review of NHS guidelines for the treatment of people from abroad. [107133]

Ms Stuart: I replied to my hon. Friend on 26 January.

NHS Net

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects all family doctors to have access to NHS Net; what is the total estimated cost to public funds of NHS Net; and if he will make a statement. [107082]

Ms Stuart: All family doctors will have access to NHSnet by the end of 2002. NHSnet is a managed service and has no capital costs to public funds. The annual cost of access to NHSnet for health authorities and National Health Service trusts is £3.8 million. The annual cost of access for general practitioners will be approximately £19 million once they are all connected. This sum includes managed services such as routers and firewalls as well as costs for 24-hour/7 day network access.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the percentage of (a) registered disabled people, (b) women, (c) people from ethnic minorities and (d) people from (i) independent schools, (ii) grammar schools and (iii) other schools employed by his Department in each of the years (i) 1970, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1989 and (iv) 1999. [107012]

Ms Stuart: We do not collect information about the educational background of staff. Available information is set out in the table.

Percentage

	1970	1979	1989		1999
	DHSS[1]	DHSS[1]	DHSS[1]	DH	DH
(a) Disability[2]	n/a	n/a	—	1.3	6
(b) Women	40	63	64	[3]51	57
(c) Ethnic minority[4]	n/a	n/a	—	4.7	14

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Local Government Finance

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the outcome of consultation on the local government finance settlement for 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [107553]

Ms Armstrong: I have today laid before the House the Local Government Finance Report (England) 2000–01 and the Special Grant Report (No. 52). These reports establish the amounts of revenue support grant (RSG) and non-domestic rates (NDR) to be paid to local authorities in 2000–01, and the basis of their distribution; and provide for Standing Spending Assessment (SSA) Reduction Grant and Central Support Protection Grant to be paid to certain authorities for 2000–01. Drafts of these reports were issued for consultation on 25 November 1999. The Department received written representations from the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government, as well as from 166 local authorities and local authority groups.

Having considered the views of the local authority associations and others who have commented on my initial proposals, I have decided not to make changes to SSAs, although the SSAs for individual authorities may be slightly different from those at consultation, generally reflecting more accurate data that have become available since then.

Since the autumn, it has become clear that £35 million less than provided will be needed to meet transitional costs of local government reorganisation. I have decided that it would be appropriate to increase grant support to local authorities by £35 million to help fund service improvements at a more modest cost in council taxes.

This year's settlement provides an overall increase of 5.8 per cent. in Government grant on top of the substantial increase of 5.5 per cent. given to local authorities in the first year of the Comprehensive Spending Review. We have provided a 5.4 per cent. increase in Education Standard Spending Assessments. We have made it clear that education is the Government's top priority, and we expect councils to pass on this increase to schools, in the expectation that the great majority of schools should receive an increase per pupil at least in line with inflation. In the last three years this Government have increased grant to local authorities by £6 billion—a real terms increase of 7.8 per cent in contrast to the previous three years of a real cut in grant of 4.3 per cent.

It is a settlement which has been generally welcomed by local authorities. We had already provided them with greater predictability by announcing three spending totals in the Comprehensive Spending Review, which sets out further increases in the pipeline for the 2001–02 settlement. We had also given them more responsibility for their spending decisions, by abolishing crude and universal capping.

The settlement ensures that no authority will lose grant next year and local authorities with education and social service responsibilities will receive grant increases of at least 1.5 per cent. It will allow councils to concentrate on their priorities and make the improvements which people wish to see to education and social services. But it also allows them to improve services while continuing the momentum of lower council tax increases.

We hope local authorities will look very carefully at the implications for council tax payers when setting budgets in the coming months.

Local authorities will wish to know that I have received representations from local government on council tax benefit subsidy limitation. I have considered these carefully but decided to make no change to the scheme I proposed on 25 November.

I shall be sending copies of these reports and the Plain English guide to all authorities, together with tables showing each authority's Standard Spending Assessment and its entitlement to RSG, NDR and special grant. I have placed copies of the reports in the Journal Office; and copies of the reports, tables and the guide in the Library.

Concessionary Bus Travel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the proportion the population in the United Kingdom which has had access to free concessionary bus transport in each year since 1990. [106820]

Mr. Hill: The information available to my Department indicates that almost 2.1 million pensioners in the United Kingdom benefit from local authority schemes for free concessionary bus travel—that represents 3.55 per cent. of the UK population. I regret that information is not available for other groups who receive free concessionary bus travel (such as people with disabilities).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the local authorities which provide free transport on buses to persons of pensionable age. [106821]

Mr. Hill: A survey carried out by my department showed that in 1995–96 the following authorities had free travel schemes for pensioners (with age group restrictions and cost of bus pass as indicated):

Local authority	Age group restriction	Cost of pass (£)
Greater London boroughs and City of London	—	—
Merseyside PTA	—	—
West Midlands PTA	—	—
Bassetlaw	—	—
Bracknell Forest	—	20.00

Brownfield Sites

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the list of brownfield sites in the United Kingdom. [106778]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The first phase of the National Land Use Database collected information, for England, on previously developed sites which may be available for redevelopment. Provisional estimates of the amount of previously developed land that may be available for redevelopment for each Government office region were published last May in the Department's Information Bulletin 500. Final estimates will be published shortly.

Publication of details for individual sites is subject to current work on licence agreements to protect the local authorities' intellectual property rights in the data.

Airports

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many complaints have been received in respect of noise in the previous 12 months at (a) Humberside, (b) Sheffield, (c) Manchester, (d) Leeds-Bradford, (e) Birmingham International, (f) East Midlands, (g) Newcastle, (h) Liverpool Speke, (i) Luton, (j) Stansted, (k) Heathrow and (l) Gatwick airport; [107000]

(2) what percentage of (i) passengers and (ii) employees at each of (a) Humberside, (b) Sheffield, (c) Manchester, (d) Leeds-Bradford, (e) Birmingham International, (f) East Midlands, (g) Newcastle, (h) Liverpool Speke, (i) Luton, (j) Stansted, (k) Heathrow and (l) Gatwick airport arrived by public transport in the last 12 months; [107001]

(3) how many residential properties lay within the 63 decibel contour at the most recent date for which information is available at (a) Humberside, (b) Sheffield, (c) Manchester, (d) Leeds-Bradford, (e) Birmingham International, (f) East Midlands, (g) Newcastle, (h) Liverpool Speke, (i) Luton, (j) Stansted, (k) Heathrow and (l) Gatwick airport. [106999]

Mr. Mullin: Figures available from the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) for the numbers of passengers arriving at the following airports by public transport in the last 12-month period reported were:

	Airport	Percentage
1994	Humberside	7
1998	Manchester	10
1992	Leeds-Bradford	2
1996	Birmingham	8
1992	East Midlands	3
1994	Newcastle	8
1996	Luton	14
1996	Stansted	33
1998	Heathrow	32
1998	Gatwick	30

The CAA does not hold figures for the numbers of employees arriving at airports by public transport.

For the three airports designated under the Civil Aviation Act 1982 the numbers of complaints about aircraft noise, as recorded by BAA plc in 1999, were:

Heathrow: 8,465

Stansted: 6,624.

Information is not held on the number of residential properties within the 63 dB(A) contours at these airports. However, the populations living within the 63 dB(A) contours in 1998 were:

Heathrow: 79,900

Gatwick: 1,500

Stansted: 1,300.

Figures for 1999 are not yet available.

The Government do not hold information on noise complaints received at other airports, or on the number of residential properties within their 63 dB(A) contours. The populations living within the 63 dB(A) contours at Manchester, Birmingham and Leeds-Bradford airports are reported in "Transport Statistics of Great Britain 1999". The latest data available in each case are:

Manchester (1997): 9,500

Birmingham (1998): 16,500

Leeds-Bradford (1995): less than 100.

We are presently carrying out a series of studies looking at the role of regional airports, and in connection with these intend to carry out further work on the noise impact of a number of the larger regional airports.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of new municipal waste incinerators that will need to be built by May 2002 to meet the Government's international commitments; [107377]

(2) what plans he has to increase the number of waste incinerators; and if he will make a statement. [107378]

Mr. Mullin: There are no international obligations requiring the construction of municipal waste incinerators, although there are stringent EU standards for emissions from such incinerators. Proposals for higher standards are under consideration.

The number of additional incinerators required in order to deal with municipal waste in the future is a matter for local authorities, who should make their decisions on the basis of the waste hierarchy and the Best Practical Environmental Option as proposed in the Government's Draft Waste Strategy. That focuses on the need to increase recycling and reuse substantially. The number of incinerators that might eventually be required will depend on the success of the Strategy in minimising the waste collected from householders.

WALES

Underground Fuel Tanks

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grant-in-aid has been provided to the Environment Agency in Wales in each of the last two years to fund emergency works arising from leaks from underground fuel tanks; and if he will make a statement. [106147]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Grant-in-aid to the Environment Agency in Wales is unhypothecated, and it is a matter for the Environment Agency to determine its own priorities for expenditure within the context of such high level objectives as the sponsoring body may set. Over the last two years, no grant-in-aid has been provided to the Environment Agency in Wales specifically to fund emergency works arising from leaks from underground fuel tanks. However, a small sum from general grant-in-aid has been spent on investigation and advice, and in responding to major incidents including those at Bontddu and Llanrwst.

Prior to 1 April 1999, grant-in-aid to the Environment Agency was paid on an England and Wales basis by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. With effect from 1 April 1999, grant-in-aid has been paid separately toward the Environment Agency's activities in Wales, initially by the Secretary of State for Wales and, since the transfer of functions on 1 July 1999, by the National Assembly for Wales.

I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 17 January 2000, Official Report, columns 247–48W.

NHS (Winter Pressures)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra funding is planned for the NHS in Wales this year in response to the influenza outbreak. [106855]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what preparations in Wales were made in 1999 to deal with the annual rise in demand for the NHS over the Christmas period. [106857]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It was envisaged early on that this winter would be particularly difficult, with the potential additional problems from the Millennium date change and the possible impact of Millennium celebrations on hospitals.

This year the NHS in Wales received its largest ever increase in discretionary allocations (+10.5 per cent.). This additional money was announced at the beginning of the current financial year, allowing all parts of the NHS to draw up action plans and make contingency arrangements early in the year, building on experiences following the allocation of £22 million over the previous two years.

Plans drawn up by the NHS included the provision of increased numbers of staff and beds in hospitals, extra local rapid-response home care services and more beds in the nursing home sector. In addition, in August last year the Chief Medical Officer for Wales issued guidance on the immunisation of vulnerable people.

Since 1 July 1999, responsibility for the NHS in Wales has been for the National Assembly for Wales.

Welsh Assembly Strategic Plan

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the need for additional resources for the Welsh Assembly to implement the first part of their recent strategic plan, with particular reference to the 30 target objectives; and what representations he has received on this matter. [107226]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have made no such assessment as the detailed actions and targets of the recent strategic plan for the period up to the end of the current Assembly (May 2003) are consistent with existing spending plans, and this is a matter for the National Assembly.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the impact on the National Assembly for Wales during the financial year 2000–01 arising from the designation of West Wales and the Valleys as an Objective 1 area. [107225]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It is too early to know the impact of Objective 1 on the National Assembly for Wales for the forthcoming financial years 2000–01. The figures set out by the National Assembly for Wales and the Welsh Partnership on the Objective 1 financial tables relate to expected commitments of funding over the full life of projects. The actual rate of expenditure will depend on the spending profiles of projects submitted and approved, which are not yet known.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the European Commission over the eligibility of private or voluntary sector finance to contribute to the member state's match-funding for European Objective 1 projects; and if he will make a statement. [107228]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have had no such discussions. The European Structural Funds Regulations, which apply to all EU member states, set no requirements for sources of match funding, which is the responsibility of the grant applicant. It is the eligibility of the activities of each specific project which needs to be assessed against the priorities in the Objective 1 programming document. Match funding from the private and voluntary sectors has been used in previous Structural Funds programmes across the UK and there is no reason why this should not continue for the new Objective 1 programme.

TREASURY

VAT (House Repair and Refurbishment)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 356W, what assumptions he made about the level of VAT evasion which would occur with a 5 per cent. rate on house repair and refurbishment relative to the current rate. [107110]

Dawn Primarolo: The effect on the level of VAT evasion of levying a 5 per cent. rate of VAT both on house refurbishment and repair and on construction on previously undeveloped land is uncertain. My answer of 17 January therefore made no allowance for any such effect.

Disabled Persons Tax Credit

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many disabled people in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire have benefited from the disabled persons tax credit since its introduction; and if he will make a statement. [107252]

Dawn Primarolo: Reliable estimates for the numbers of families in receipt of the disabled persons tax credit are not yet available on a constituency or county basis, but will be available shortly.

International European Movement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the UK share of Community resources provided to the Federal Council of the International European Movement on 6 November; what was the nature of that support; and what was the nature of UK participation. [105539]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

The International Secretariat of the European Movement received a subsidy of euro 300,000 from the European Community budget in 1999.

In 1999, the UK's gross contribution to the EC budget (i.e. before abatement) was approximately 15 per cent.

The relevant budget lines are administered by the Commission headquarters in Brussels.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racism (Football Matches)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the progress made by football clubs in tackling racist behaviour among football spectators; [106286]

(2) what measures his Department is taking to tackle racist behaviour among football spectators. [106287]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under Section 3 of The Football (Offences) Act 1991, as amended by Section 9 of the Football (Offences and Disorder) Act 1999, it is an offence for a person to engage or take part in chanting of a racist nature at football matches. The 1999 Act came into effect in September 1999 and the police and courts have been urged to use the extended powers at their disposal.

The Football Association, the League Managers Association, the Professional Footballers Association, the Football Association Premier League, football clubs and supporter groups are all working hard to eliminate racism from football. The Government will continue to play their part by providing the necessary legislative framework; monitoring implementation of the various measures recommended by the Football Task Force; and supporting initiatives like Show Racism the Red Card.

Criminal Records Bureau

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress being made on the establishment of the Criminal Records Bureau. [106528]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) on 16 December 1999, Official Report, columns 271–72W. Since that time, following evaluation of the bids received from potential private sector partners, we have shortlisted three bidders who have been invited to take part in a technical design study in the spring.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of violent crimes, in the most recently published figures, were crimes of domestic violence. [106779]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not available. Recorded crime figures are based on the legal definition of offences. The relationship of the victim and any alleged offender is not recorded.

In the 1998 British Crime Survey, it was estimated that 25 per cent. of the violent offences it addressed were domestic in nature. The most detailed information on domestic violence, collected in the 1996 British Crime Survey, is given in the Home Office Research Study No. 191 called "Domestic Violence: Findings from a new British Crime Survey self-completion questionnaire", which was published in 1999.

Police Force (Wales)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the increase was in the number of police officers in Wales from 1998 to 1999. [106854]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The number of police officers in the police service in Wales increased between March 1998 and March 1999 by 29 to 6,646.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase (a) funding for the Police Service and (b) the number of police officers in Wales in the next 12 months. [106870]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the spending plans of the Government and the National Assembly for Wales, funding of the police service in Wales is set to increase by 2.6 per cent., or £9.3 million in 2000–01. It is for the individual chief constables and their police authorities to determine staffing levels within the resources available.

Police forces in Wales are eligible to bid for a share of the crime fighting fund to recruit 5,000 police officers over and above the number they would otherwise have recruited over the next three years. All four forces have submitted applications. They will be informed of our decision in the next few weeks.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts for the provision of accommodation for asylum seekers after 1 April have been entered into by his Department; how many units of accommodation each will contract provide; and what are the estimated costs of each unit of accommodation so provided. [106687]

Mrs. Roche: No contracts have yet been signed for the provision of accommodation. Contract negotiations are currently being conducted and should be concluded shortly.

Entry Clearance Refusals

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the visitor's right of appeal on the refusal of entry will be reinstated. [106781]

Mrs. Roche: We are committed to restoring a right of appeal to family visitors who have been refused entry clearance. Part IV of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 enables us to do this. We will be bringing Part IV into effect on 2 October 2000, the day on which the Human Rights Act 1998 comes into force.

Footpaths

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were in (a) 1998, (b) 1993 and (c) 1988 under Regulation 103 of the Motor Vehicle (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 relating to obstruction of a footpath by a motor vehicle; and what the breakdown was in each year by police authority in England. [106570]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This offence cannot be distinguished from other offences of obstruction, waiting and parking in the statistics collected centrally.

Enderby Leisure Centre (CCTV)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further information he requires concerning the Enderby Leisure Centre CCTV proposal before he makes a final decision on the bid, and when he will make a final decision. [106478]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office has asked the crime and disorder partnership responsible for the Enderby Leisure Centre Closed Circuit Television bid to provide further information relating to the proposed operational and technical requirements for the system and the need for an adequate code of practice to govern its use. We will work closely with the partnership to resolve these issues as quickly as possible once the required information has been provided.

Au Pairs (Lithuania)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to allow the employment of au pairs from Lithuania; and if he will make a statement. [106475]

Mrs. Roche: No. There are no plans at present to extend the au pair scheme under the Immigration Rules to Lithuania, or to any other country.

Police (Essex)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in the Colchester Police Division in September each year from 1995 to 1999; and if he will make a statement. [106557]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information available, which is set out in the table, has been provided by the Chief Constable of Essex. The force is not able to provide figures for 1995 and 1996.

I understand that the reduction between 1997 and 1998 was partly due to the transfer of some posts from Divisional strength to Headquarters strength, although the officers concerned remained based in Colchester.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers there were in the Essex police force in each year from 1985 to 1999, giving figures on a quarterly basis from 1995 onwards; and if he will make a statement. [106548]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information available is set out in the table. Since 1995, police numbers have been collected only twice a year—in March and September—so as to reduce administrative burdens on the police.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional police officers he will agree can be added to his Department's authorised number employed by the Essex Police Authority as a result of the transfer on 1 April to the Essex Police Authority of that part of Essex currently policed by the Metropolitan Police. [106550]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Each police force in England and Wales has a "notional establishment" of police officers for the purposes of allocating 10 per cent. of the police grant (most of the grant is allocated according to a needs-based funding formula). For the purposes of allocating the police grant in 2000–01, the notional establishment of Essex police was increased by 137 to take account of the enlargement of the Essex police area as a result of the change to the boundary of the Metropolitan police district on April 2000. This followed consultation with Essex police, Essex Police Authority and the Metropolitan police.

The actual numbers of police officers in the Essex police area following the boundary change will be a matter for the Chief Constable on the basis of the resources made available to him.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Metropolitan Police budget will be reduced from 1 April when that part of the County of Essex currently policed by the Metropolitan Police is transferred to the Essex Police Authority. [106547]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Funding for the Metropolitan Police in 2000–01 will reduce by around £5.9 million over 1999–2000 levels to reflect the boundary change with Essex Police Authorities.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan Police officers will transfer to the Essex Police Authority from 1 April when that part of the County of Essex currently policed by the Metropolitan Police is transferred to the Essex Police Authority; how many will stay with the Metropolitan Police; and how many will retire. [106549]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that there is no fixed allocation of Metropolitan Police Officers to the area that is to be transferred from the Metropolitan Police District to Essex Police Authority from 1 April. As a result of the boundary change, 10 Metropolitan Police Officers will transfer to the Essex Police before 1 April and four afterwards.

In addition, 32 Metropolitan Police Officers are expected to be seconded to Essex Police on 1 April for up to 18 months, after which they will return to duties in the Metropolitan Police District. No Metropolitan Police officer is expected to retire as a consequence of the boundary change.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional funding he will give to Essex Police Authority in 2000–01 to police that part of the county which from 1 April is transferred from the Metropolitan police; and if this figure, indexed accordingly, will be built into the authority's base figure in future years. [106546]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The proposed funding allocation for the Essex Police Authority in 2000–01 will increase by 7.2 per cent., or £11.8 million, over 1999–2000 levels to £174.8 million. This increase is significantly above the national average increase of 2.8 per cent. as it takes into account the enlargement of the Essex police area as a result of the boundary changes with the Metropolitan police from 1 April 2000.

Funding allocations for the police service in England and Wales are made by means of a needs-based formula. Allocations for future years will reflect the Essex Police Authority's new boundaries from 1 April 2000.

Prisoners (Right of Confidentiality)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rights prisoners have to confidentiality in interviews conducted with journalists. [106446]

Mr. Boateng: Interviews with journalists are conducted in the same way as other visits, and thus are governed by policy set out in Prison Service Standing Order 5A, a copy of which is in the Library. Under this Order, for reasons of security and control, prisoners do not have the right to confidentiality, except in the case of visits from their legal advisers.

Visits are conducted within the sight of a prison officer, and are liable to be within the officer's hearing, particularly where security considerations require close supervision of the visit.

The provisions for legal visits are different, in order to ensure that a prisoner's access to the legal system is not in any way compromised. Such visits take place within the sight, but not within the hearing, of prison officers.

Immigration

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people seeking entry to the UK in each of the last five years have been refused under the provision of Immigration Rule 320(18). [106985]

Mrs. Roche: The available information relates only to persons refused leave to enter and removed where the principal reason for the decision was taken under paragraph 320(18) and is given in the table.

Police Complaints Authority

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further appointments he has made to the Police Complaints Authority. [107855]

Mr. Straw: I am pleased to announce that Her Majesty the Queen has approved the appointment of Sir Alistair Graham as Chair of the Police Complaints Authority and that I have appointed Mrs. Wendy Towers as a member of the Authority.

Sir Alistair previously served as Chairman of the Parades Commission for Northern Ireland since 1997. He will take up his post on 1 April 2000 and the appointment is for three years initially.

Mrs. Towers was previously a full-time member of the Parole Board and had earlier followed a career in personnel management. She will take up her post on 7 February and her appointment is also for an initial three year period.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Year References (AD Suffix)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to change the AD suffix in official year references. [107179]

Mr. Alan Johnson: None.

Post Offices (Derbyshire)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices there were in (a) Derbyshire and (b) the West Derbyshire constituency in each year from 1980 to 1999; and if he will make a statement. [107127]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that they do not hold historic information on the numbers of post offices in each parliamentary constituency or local administrative area and that such information cannot readily be compiled.

The Post Office advise that in October 1999 the number of post offices in the county of Derbyshire was 337 and in the West Derbyshire constituency was 64.

Marks and Spencer

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the senior management of Marks and Spencer to discuss the impact on employment levels of their decision to terminate supply contracts with W. S. Baird Ltd. [107022]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I am due to meet senior managers of Marks and Spencer in the coming few weeks for a routine briefing. No doubt product sourcing will be one of many issues discussed.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has held with Department for Education and Employment ministers on the impact on employment of Marks and Spencer's decision to discontinue sourcing from W. S. Baird Ltd. [107021]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I have not discussed the decision of Marks and Spencer to discontinue sourcing from W. S. Baird Ltd. with Ministers from the Department for Education and Employment. However, Government Departments, including the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department for Education and Employment are in regular contact and work together to provide a range of support to the textile and clothing industry.

Innovation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of worker participation on innovation; and if he will make a statement. [106522]

Ms Hewitt: The impact of employment practices on all aspects of a firm's performance is of key interest to my Department. The Workplace Employee Relations Survey, published last September[1], clearly shows that workplace outcomes and performance appear to be influenced by the way employees are managed. Workplaces with modern employment practices (which included problem-solving groups) were associated with improved performance, less resignations, less dismissals and better management-employee relations.

DTI analysis of data from the Community Innovation Survey and some results form survey work on SME innovation by the Centre for Business Research in Cambridge[2] has provided evidence on the connections between labour market practices, business human resource management and innovation. Innovative companies use flexible labour market practices but are relatively more intensively engaged in staff development and active human resource management. Training linked to technological change goes with higher levels of innovativeness, reinforcing the message that developing staff capabilities tends to be conducive to innovation.

The positive impact of involving people throughout an organisation was also highlighted in Partnerships with People, a study conducted in 1997 and co-sponsored by the DTI. It concluded that an organisation's creative and innovative potential can be released when its employees are fully involved in all areas of the organisation.

My Department will be commissioning further research to examine the effects of partnership and workplace performance using WERS 98. We can only improve competitiveness if we work together to improve every aspect of our performance, including making the most of our innovative potential. I believe that partnership is at the heart of what constitutes a responsible and successful organisation.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports he has received from the Low Pay Commission on the impact on unemployment of the national minimum wage; and if he will make a statement. [106524]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government asked the Low Pay Commission to examine the effect of the introduction of the national minimum wage, in particular its impact on employment. I received the Commission's report in December and am consulting other Government Departments about the report's findings. Once this consultation is completed, I will publish the report and the Government's response.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received to increase the level of the national minimum wage; and if he will make a statement. [106523]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department has received a number of representations on the level of the national minimum wage in recent weeks. As with its introduction, any future changes to the national minimum wage rates will take account of the economic circumstances prevailing at the time.

Bradwell Power Station

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the economic impact of the closure of Bradwell Power Station. [106179]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 24 January 2000]: An assessment was prepared in 1998 by PriceWaterhouseCoopers (PWC) who were commissioned by Essex Training and Enterprise Council (TEC) and key partner organisations to undertake a review on the impact of Bradwell Power Station upon the local economy, and of the mechanisms which might be put in place to counter any effects of the closure of the plant. No further assessment has been made by the Government.

Arrangements are being made with Essex TEC for a copy of the PWC report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance from public funds will be available to mitigate the economic effects of the closure of Bradwell Power Station; and if he will make a statement. [106180]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 24 January 2000]: Maldon has been designated by the Government as an Enterprise Grants Area. Under the Enterprise Grant Scheme grants up to £75,000 may be paid in support of new investment by business employing up to 250 people. Investment by SMEs in the vicinity of Bradwell may therefore be eligible for financial assistance.

The Small Business Service franchisee for Essex and the Learning and Skills Council for Essex will need to consider whether to make available special assistance for business start-up and for retraining to help people made redundant when Bradwell closes in 2002.

Garment Imports

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the (a) volume and (b) value of imported garments for retail sale in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [106923]

Mr. Alan Johnson: In the 12 months to October 1999, the UK imported apparel and clothing accessories worth £7,611 million. Within this total, it is not possible separately to identify imports for retail sale. Information, in volume terms, is available only for clothing and footwear. In the 12 months ended October 1999, imports of clothing and footwear, in 1995 prices, were 44 per cent. higher than in 1995.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 261W, on MOX fuel, what issues he plans to explore in respect of the proposals to return unused MOX fuel from Japan; what meetings have been held, or are planned between representatives of the United Kingdom and Japanese Governments and the respective nuclear authorities; and if he will make a statement. [106730]

Mrs. Liddell: This issue will be discussed between the UK and Japanese Governments.

I have met with the Japanese Ambassador, and officials are to visit Japan in the near future.

Photovoltaics

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the (a) short and (b) long-term contributions that photovoltaics could make in reducing carbon emissions in the UK. [106792]

Mrs. Liddell: For the short term, photovoltaics (PV) is a relatively expensive technology, and the cost is unlikely to decrease sufficiently for it to make more than a small contribution to carbon emission reductions in the UK over the next decade. In the longer term, however, PV has the potential to make a significant contribution to carbon savings. The DTI has been supporting a programme of research, development and demonstration of the technology in the UK for several years and, together with support from the European Union, a number of major examples of building integrated PV are now operating, such as Northumbria University, Ford Engine Factory, and Doxford Solar Offices.

The annual generating capacity of PV installed in the UK at the moment is around 0.5 gigawatt hours (GWh). A study conducted for my Department in 1998 suggested that, for five key applications, new and refurbished offices, superstores, new housing and prestige public buildings, the maximum potential, disregarding cost, would be around 7 terrawatt hours (TWh) a year in 2010, around 2 per cent. of current electricity consumption. Investment costs were estimated at around £30 billion. The likely market potential for these applications without substantial levels of subsidy, but assuming significant cost and performance improvements and significant levels of carbon and pollution taxes, was estimated at less than 0.2 TWh/yr by 2010. Clearly, all such estimates can only give a broad indication of potential and the figures quoted are not comprehensive, excluding retrofit installation of PV on domestic roofs for example, where costs are currently high but the theoretical potential is large. Nevertheless, I believe that they give a reasonable indication of the possible scale of contribution in the short to medium term.

This compares with a theoretical estimate of around 270 TWh/yr available in 2025 from installing PV on all available walls and roofs for the entire building stock. More realistically, if PV were to be installed on all south-facing roofs and facades this would yield an annual output of around 70 TWh, or a little over 22 per cent. of current electricity consumption, which stands at around 324 TWh/yr. Alternatively, if 50 square miles (about 0.1 per cent. of the UK's total land area) were covered with PV panels, this would have the technical potential to generate about 15 TWh of electricity (about 5 per cent. of current consumption). The extent and rate at which this longer term potential is exploited will depend on a number of factors, principally on the rate at which costs are reduced, itself the subject of much debate.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives his Department is taking to promote clean coal technology. [106935]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's policy on cleaner coal technologies is set out in Energy Paper 67: "Cleaner Coal Technologies—Future plans for research, development and export promotion", which was published in April 1999. The promotional activities that my Department has initiated as part of the policy set out in Energy Paper 67 includes:

initiating a portfolio of research and development projects in collaboration with UK industry and universities (R&D projects are being supported following an annual call for proposals. Details of the call process are available on the DTI website); undertaking a DTI led mission to China with UK industry in September 1999 to promote UK expertise (A further DTI led mission to India will take place in September this year); publishing an export directory and a series of capability brochures on UK expertise in cleaner coal technologies; and publishing a number of reports on the technology status of cleaner coal technology and the financing the development of the technologies.

Copies of Energy Paper 67 are available in the Libraries of the House and on the DTI website (www.dti.gov.uk/ent/coal), together with other publications arising from the programme. The DTI website is being used to help promote UK capability in cleaner coal technologies and provide up to date information on developments in the DTI programme.

Defence-related Exports (Nigeria)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's 1998–99 exposure in unrecovered claims for exports to Nigeria is for defence-related exports. [105932]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 24 January 2000]: Nine per cent. of the unrecovered claims relating to Nigeria are defence-related. These claims were all authorised prior to 1996 and are currently recorded on ECGD's Balance Sheet as assets.

Roads and Bridges (Philippines)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has had concerning British involvement in the National Roads and Bridges Project in the Philippines; and if he will make a statement. [107375]

Mr. Caborn: We have discussed the National Roads and Bridges Project in the Philippines with interested companies. Several consortia are involved and the question as to whether this should be a competitive tender or a negotiated contract has arisen. However, this Project is being funded by the Department for International Development and the companies should keep in close contact with them.

Benefit Payment Methods

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received about the proposed payment of benefits directly into bank accounts rather than at post offices; and how many of these representations are (a) in favour and (b) against. [104723]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

Letters often cover a number of subjects but we have received around 500 dealing with ACT in some way.

Starting in 2003, we will be moving to a more modern, secure and efficient method of paying benefits through automated credit transfer (ACT). Payment by ACT will become the norm for paying benefits.

However, we have given an assurance that those benefit recipients, whether paid by ACT or otherwise, will continue to have a choice of where they access their cash, with those who wish to collect at post offices still being able to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 2000, Official Report, column 231W, on stakeholder pensions, what have been the findings of recent departmental surveys on (a) the number of people with non-mortgage debt and (b) the distribution of non-mortgage debts among persons with annual earnings in the range £9,000 to £21,500 who are not members of an occupational or personal pension scheme. [106805]

Mr. Rooker: The necessary combined information on non-mortgage debt, earnings and pension provision is not available from departmental surveys. Some data are available from one wave of the British Household Panel Survey, which showed the following distribution of reported non-mortgage debt among survey respondents with earnings between £9,000 and £21,500 and who were not current members of an occupational or a personal pension scheme. Reliable estimates of the numbers of such persons with non-mortgage debt cannot, however, be derived from this source.

Level of non-mortgage debt	Percentage of respondents
Nil	55
Less than £500	12
£500 to £1,500	11
£1,500 to £4,000	13
Over £4,000	10

Notes:

1. Sample base—respondents with earnings between £9,000 and £21,500 (in current earnings terms) who reported no current membership of an occupational or personal pension scheme.
2. The size of debt is self-assessed debt.
3. Figures do not sum to 100 per cent. because of rounding.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Free TV Licences

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects the computer system necessary for the pensioners' free TV licence scheme to be in place; upon what date he expects that the scheme will commence; when he expects to publish details of the scheme, with particular reference to terms for refunds for those reaching the age of 75 years within the duration of a licence; and if he will make a statement. [107181]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 27 January 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his pre-Budget statement on 9 November 1999, Official Report, columns 883–91, that people aged 75 or over will receive their television licence free of charge from this autumn. The Government intend to announce shortly the precise starting date and details of how the scheme will operate.

Farmers (Tourism)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has had with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning farmers diversifying into tourism. [104919]

Janet Anderson: We were, of course, consulted when the UK's Rural Development proposals were being prepared. We fully support the proposals of my right hon. Friend the Agriculture Minister to introduce a radical redirection of support for agriculture. This initiative will give new help to farmers wishing to diversify into other activity, including tourism, through a significant increase in expenditure on rural development measures, including the environment and diversification. We are now involved in discussing how this programme of measures, when approved by the Commission, can best contribute to sustainable tourism in rural areas—to the long-term benefit of farmers and visitors alike.

HEALTH

Dyspraxia

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children who have been diagnosed dyspraxic have been refused treatment by the Thames Gateway NHS Trust in North Kent since May 1997. [104862]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available. However, no children with verbal dyspraxia have been refused speech and language therapy services. For motor dyspraxia all urgent referrals are seen. These children are assessed and given an activity programme to do at home and their progress is reviewed every three months.

Long-term Care

Sir Geoffrey JohnsonSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposed regulations on the number of businesses in the long-term care industry; and what percentage of the available long-term beds these businesses account for; [106378]

(2) what plans he has to establish a system to monitor the quality of care in addition to the physical elements described in his Department's document "Fit for the Future?"; [106380]

(3) what research his Department has undertaken into the impact on the NHS of increased private sector demand for the skilled staff required by "Fit for the Future?"; [106383]

(4) what research his Department has carried out on the cost implications of the level access requirement of his "Fit for the Future?" document; [106381]

(5) what assessment he has made of the cost implications of the "Fit for the Future?" requirement that doorways should be at least 900mm. wide; [106382]

(6) what assessment he has made of the geographical distribution of non-compliant long-term care accommodation in relation to demographic trends and likely local shortfalls in service availability. [106379]

Mr. Hutton: The new National Care Standards Commission will regulate care services and private healthcare. The Commission will ensure that services meet the finalised minimum standards. The proposals in "Fit for the Future?" are aimed at promoting better quality care and helping to prevent abuse by grounding practice on the principles of dignity, choice, privacy and respect.

The Department did not carry out research into the impact of each of the standards proposed. However, Laing and Buisson were commissioned to work on a cost-benefit analysis of the standards to ascertain the likely burden on providers nationally. Additional information was gathered from Heads of Inspection regarding the current standard of provision. Information from these studies was published in "Fit for the Future?" along with a regulatory impact appraisal.

We will be issuing a revised regulatory impact appraisal with the published standards later this year.

The Department has not conducted any specific research into the impact on the National Health Service of the proposals concerning ratios of qualified nurses to other staff in nursing homes. However, we are funding a major study by Kings College, University of London, tracking the careers of 3,000 new entrants to nursing. Although not the focus of the research, this will help assess the demand for nurses, including from the private sector. We are also actively considering models for assessment of nursing needs which would allow levels of qualified nurses to relate more flexibility to assessed needs.

Christie Hospital, Manchester

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a Minister in his Department will next visit the Christie Hospital in Manchester. [106692]

Mr. Hutton: I visited the Christie Hospital on Friday 21 January.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) guidelines and (b) regulations are in force concerning the rights of elderly residents in nursing homes who may be forced to leave those homes as a result of a change in registration by the owners of such homes. [106924]

Mr. Hutton: Residential care homes are currently required to give reasonable notice to residents of any intention to terminate arrangements for accommodating them. Nursing homes are not currently under the same statutory obligation. This will be remedied in the new arrangements for regulating care, through the regulations and national standards we are introducing.

None the less we regard it as good practice that any decision to close a home or part of a home is handled as sensitively and appropriately as possible. When a home does have to close or beds are redesignated, the essential thing is that there should be proper arrangements made for the safe and satisfactory transfer of all residents to other suitable homes. Adequate time should be allowed for this to be done and in a way that allows both residents and their relatives a choice in where they are to move to, and which creates the minimum possible discomfort to all concerned.

Audiology Services

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent representations he has received on age discrimination in applying the 'needs test' system with respect to the provision of digital hearing aids; [107058]

(2) what proposals he has to increase the funding of audiology services within the NHS; [107057]

(3) if he will make a statement on availability of digital hearing aids in the NHS. [107056]

Mr. Hutton: We have not received any representations about age discrimination for the supply of digital hearing aids. A project will start in England later this year to trial digital hearing aids for National Health Service patients. This project will help inform our plans to modernise hearing aid services. Detailed proposals for the scheme are being developed, but we anticipate that the project will cover 20 hearing aid departments and that an estimated 20,000 to 30,000 patients will benefit from the scheme. The project is intended to lead to improvements for all NHS patients.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Correspondence

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place copies of the correspondence between his Department and Mr. Radonur Putnikovich in the Library. [106872]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 25 January 2000]: I would be happy to place copies of this correspondence in the Library.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Brussels on 24 to 25 January; and if he will make a statement. [107150]

Mr. Vaz: The General Affairs Council in Brussels on 24 January adopted the A points listed in document no. 5443/00 and noted the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament in its sessions of 1–2 December in Brussels, listed in document no. 12794/99, and 13–17 December in Strasbourg, listed in document no. 13877/99. Copies of the documents listing the A points and the resolutions will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

Open Debate: European Security and Defence Policy

The Portuguese Presidency put forward their programme of work. Discussion focused on how to take forward the remits from the Helsinki European Council on European security and defence policy, in particular progress on improving military capabilities, and relations between the EU and NATO, including the role of non-EU Allies and others in any new arrangements in the EU.

Follow up to Helsinki European Council

(A) IGC. The Presidency described its plans for organising the first stage of negotiations in the IGC.

(B) Enlargement. The Presidency and Commission set out the work programme for the next six months and confirmed their commitment to continued progress in negotiations for all countries and to differentiation (each country proceeding on merit at its own speed), including the possibility that countries starting negotiations this year might catch up with those already in negotiations.

Lisbon European Council Preparation

The Presidency presented a framework document on preparatory work towards the Lisbon Special Council on employment, economic reform and social cohesion. It set out the key objective of making the EU over the next 10 years the world's most dynamic and competitive knowledge-based economy, able to boost economic growth levels with more and better jobs and greater social cohesion.

Middle East Peace Process

The Council received a report of the Presidency and High Representative's visit to the region and discussed prospects for the Peace Process.

President Arafat attended lunch and briefed Ministers on developments on the Palestinian track. The Council welcomed recent reforms to the Palestinian Authority's procedures for financial management and called for further reforms in support of good governance and respect for human rights.

Russia

The Council welcomed the democratic conduct of the Duma elections and the smooth transition of power after President Yeltsin's resignation. It emphasised its wish to develop the long-term strategic partnership between the EU and Russia.

The Council reiterated the EU's deep concern about continuing violence in Chechnya and condemned the indiscriminate use of force by the Russian authorities. While it did not question Russia's right to preserve its territorial integrity, the Council emphasised Russia's great responsibility to respect its obligations under international humanitarian law. The EU would continue to press for de-escalation of the violence, a rapid ceasefire and a political solution to the crisis.

The Council welcomed the action taken to follow up the Declaration of the Helsinki European Council, including the revision of the Presidency's work plan for the EU Common Strategy on Russia. The Council invited the Commission to refocus the TACIS 2000 programme on core areas directly promoting democratic values, and agreed that the EU should respond firmly to any infringements of Russia's trade obligations under the Partnership and Co-operation Agreement.

EU/Turkey

The Presidency and Commission outlined plans for implementing the Helsinki European Council conclusions on Turkey.

Western Balkans

The Council welcomed the agreement of the Serbian democratic opposition of 10 January and their call for early elections in Serbia. The Council made it clear the EU was willing to offer substantial political and economic support to a democratic Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). It invited the Commission to prepare a proposal to extend the Energy for Democracy programme.

The Council stressed its continuing support for the democratically elected government of Montenegro, and invited the Commission to submit further concrete proposals to address Montenegro's most urgent needs.

On Kosovo, the Council agreed that urgent action was needed to address the continued violence against minorities and the growing threat of organised crime in Kosovo. It recognised the urgent need to reinforce the international police presence, particularly through specialists in organised crime and drug trafficking. It took note of UNMIK's worrying financial situation and agreed to address the problem without delay.

The Council welcomed the democratic outcome of the recent parliamentary elections in Croatia, and looked forward to the presidential elections and the formation of the new government. The Council emphasised the need to meet the conditions necessary for a closer relationship with the EU and looked forward to helping the new government achieve early progress. The Council agreed to establish rapidly the Joint EU-Croatia Consultative Task Force and invite Croatian Prime Minister designate to the General Affairs Council on 14 February.

The Council called for early and comprehensive implementation by Bosnia and Herzegovina's Joint Presidency of the New York Declaration. It urged the Bosnian parties to pass the Permanent Election Law and legislation on the Statute of the Council of Ministers incompliance with the constitution.

The Council adopted the negotiating directives for a Stabilisation and Association Agreement with Macedonia, and invited the Commission to make preparations to open negotiations in March 2000.

The Council examined the Commission's feasibility study for a Stabilisation and Association Agreement with Albania. It invited the Albanian government to present a plan of action for addressing the weaknesses identified in the study. The Council reaffirmed the EU's readiness to support the reform process in Albania.

Aid to Venezuela

The Council approved a Commission document on EU aid efforts in Venezuela following last month's flooding.

EU Africa Summit

The Presidency described its plans for a possible EU/Africa Summit in April.

EU/South Africa

The Presidency briefed the Council on contacts between the Commission and South Africa on the implementation of the EU/South Africa Trade, Development and Co-operation Agreement.

Oil Tanker Safety

The Council agreed that the safety of oil tankers was a matter of great concern to the EU. The Commission will produce a Communication in time for the next Transport Council on oil tanker safety, concentrating on oil tankers most at risk, re-examining the system of classifying tankers, phasing out single-hull tankers, reviewing liability and compensation and promoting transparency in the maritime world.

Association Council with Tunisia

The Association Council with Tunisia covered a range of political and economic issues. The Presidency raised Tunisia's human rights record and stressed the importance of the political dialogue between the EU and Tunisia. EU support for economic reform in Tunisia was discussed, with Tunisia looking forward to continued co-operation in support of progress towards the free trade area foreseen under the Barcelona Process.

Co-operation Council with Moldova

The second EU-Moldova Co-operation Council took place on 25 January. Discussion focused on the positive progress made under the EU-Moldova Partnership and Co-operation Agreement over the past year, and on Moldova's desire to further strengthen its relationship with the EU. There were also discussions on the internal political situation in Moldova (including Transdniestria), Moldova/Russia relations, and Moldovan participation in regional co-operation.

DEFENCE

Battle Management Systems

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for instituting battle management systems and digitisation testbed configurations within the Royal forces. [99416]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Battle management systems are being introduced to optimise decision support in areas from crisis management to operations in theatre. The Joint Operational Command System (JOCS) provides this capability to the Permanent Joint Headquarters and its deployed headquarters and has been used on recent operations. All three services have programmes to deliver battle management systems which will integrate with JOCS. They include:

The Command Support System for the Royal Navy. Currently being introduced into service, it provides for enhanced information systems and management functions between ships, submarines and shore headquarters.

The Army's Formation Battle Management System will provide a fully integrated and deployable command and control system from a Corps headquarters down to units. It will be linked with the Battle Group Battle Management System.

The RAF Command and Control Information System is currently being implemented. It will provide for the command and control of air assets from operational stations to headquarters. It is envisaged that it will develop towards the Joint Command System (Air) and integrate with other command systems.

Joint Battlespace Digitization, which is in the early stages of development, aims to integrate operational information systems across the land, sea and air environments to enhance military capability in joint operations.

A study is currently being conducted to explore the feasibility for a joint service test and reference facility to incorporate the current single Service reference centres in providing a joint digitization testbed. The programme is in the very early stages.

Jaguar Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to his Department of the Jaguars that were sent to India in the last three years. [104109]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 364W.

Helios 2 Project

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons his Department decided not to contribute to France's Helios 2 project. [104320]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The MOD has neither sought nor received any proposals for direct UK participation in, or contribution to, France's Helios 2 programme. The UK, as a member of the Western European Union, is considering the potential of a number of satellite observation programmes to meet WEU requirements. The Helios 2 programme may be offered to meet these requirements.

Defence Research

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the Government's budget has been allocated for defence research in the current financial year and in each of the past six years. [104361]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Expenditure under "major customers' research budgets" in the Appropriation Accounts for the years in question is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure (£ million)
1993–94	452.735
1994–95	534.754
1995–96	484.015
1996–97	533.421
1997–98	455.868
1998–99[1]	460
1999–2000[1]	457

[1] Forecast

These are net figures and at outturn prices (i.e. with no allowance for inflation). These figures differ from those published in the annual "Forward Look" publication on Government-funded science, engineering and technology because the latter are based on statistical categorisation of expenditure rather than resource allocations and include, for example, technology demonstrator programmes and loans and grants to DERA.

C17 Transports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from whom his Department has received representations supporting the leasing of C17 transports from the USA. [104404]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Representations by several companies having a potential commercial interest in the Royal Air Force's acquisition of C17 transports have been forwarded by hon. Members. I am withholding details under Exemption 13 (third party's commercial confidences) of the Code of Practice on access to Government Information, on the grounds that a particular company's support for one option in a current competition is a matter potentially within that company's commercial interest.

Cadets

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requirement there will be for volunteers working within the cadet forces to be subject to checking with the Criminal Records Bureau. [106134]

Mr. Spellar: Adults currently working within the cadet forces will not be subject to check with the Criminal Records Bureau, as their suitability has already been assessed by my Department. The Criminal Records Bureau will carry out checks on new adult volunteers who wish to work within the cadet forces when this service is provided to the public and voluntary sector.

Zimbabwe (Arms Sales)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the (a) people and (b) organisations representing defence manufacturers who have made representations to his Department about arms sales to Zimbabwe over the last 17 months; and when such representations were made; [106951]

(2) how many representatives of arms manufacturers have made representations to (a) him, (b) his advisers and (c) officials about arms sales to Zimbabwe over the last 17 months; and if he will list the individuals and companies concerned, indicating the dates on which representations were made. [106940]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Department receives numerous inquiries, through face to face contacts, correspondence and over the telephone from people and organisations representing defence manufacturers inquiring about defence equipment sales opportunities worldwide. It is not practical to maintain detailed records of all such inquiries and the information requested is not available.

RAF Finningley

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if each expression of interest in the purchase of RAF Finningley was followed up. [106946]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Yes. Of the 11 expressions of interest following the 1996 marketing exercise, 10 of the parties were interviewed by our agents and the other decided to withdraw. Of the 15 new expressions of interest following the 1997 exercise, five of these withdrew, and our agents conducted interviews with all the others.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what methods expressions of interest in the purchase of RAF Finningley were sought. [106944]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Our selling agents, Drivers Jonas of London, conducted an advertising campaign in 1996 and 1997 seeking expressions of interest through advertisements in the "Estates Gazette", a sale board at the site and contacting potential developers and other interested parties listed on their commercial database. A four-page colour brochure was also produced and sent to all inquirers. A detailed package of information was sent to those who requested it.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many expressions of interest have been received in connection with the purchase of RAF Finningley. [106943]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Following the initial advertising campaign in 1996, 11 firm expressions of interest were received. The sale process was delayed to allow the Home Office to consider whether the site would be suitable for use as a prison. A subsequent advertising campaign in 1997 produced 23 firm expressions of interest (including eight reaffirmations from the 1996 campaign).

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what process was used to determine the final purchaser of RAF Finningley. [106950]

Mr. Kilfoyle: After receipt of detailed proposals, discussions and negotiations were conducted with the two highest bidders. Their bids were broadly similar, and substantially in excess of the other bids, but further inquiries were needed to determine the timing, certainty and full value of their proposals. Given the potential use of the site for a major civil airport, advice was also sought from DETR and from the Government Office for Yorkshire and Humberside. As a result of this process and a final best bid stage, Peel Holdings plc was selected as the preferred purchaser. The site was sold to them in June 1999.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what method was used to evaluate expressions of interest in the purchase of RAF Finningley. [106945]

Mr. Kilfoyle: At interview all parties were evaluated on the basis of experience of developing similar sites, realism of development proposals including time scale, method of funding and a general assessment of their experience and ability. This resulted in a shortlist of six parties who were invited to provide detailed bids.

Kirkcudbright Test Range

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 282W, on the meeting between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency, if he will place in the Library a copy of the working notes taken at the meeting. [106726]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The working notes of the meeting between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency are a record of internal discussions and I am therefore withholding them under Exception 2 (Internal discussion and advice) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ammunition

Mr. DuncanSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many rounds of ammunition by type were expended in the Royal Navy other than in operations in each of the last five years; [107246]

(2) how many rounds of ammunition by type were expended in the Army by the (a) infantry, (b) armoured corps, (c) artillery and (d) other support elements, in each of the last five years, other than in operations. [107244]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 27 January 2000]: I am withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to Defence, Security and International Relations.

Kosovo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to his budget, by category, of provisioning Russian forces at Pristina airport; and if he will make a statement. [107089]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 27 January 2000]: Following receipt of a request from the commander of the Russian forces in Kosovo, the then Commander of KFOR, Lieutenant General Sir Mike Jackson took the decision to supply the Russians with 15,000 litres of bottled water, along with a small number of maps on 16 June. The costs to my Department were £2,356 and £3 respectively.

Casualty Ship

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to order the 200-bed primary casualty receiving ship announced in the Strategic Defence Review. [107249]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 27 January 2000]: A range of procurement options for the Primary Casualty Receiving Ship is being considered, including a full PFI service. Current indications are that we should be in a position to place a contract during 2002. The programme to achieve this date is being developed.

RAF Neatishead

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Neatishead. [107395]

Mr. Spellar: The issues raised during consultation on the future of RAF Neatishead and RAF Buchan are currently being investigated. An announcement will be made once this work is complete.

Old Range, Shoeburyness

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he sold the Old Range at Shoeburyness; to whom; and at what price. [107027]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The whole of the Old Ranges and Horseshoe Barracks, Shoeburyness, was sold, subject to contract, on 20 January 2000 with completion expected towards the end of March 2000. Until then, details of the purchaser and purchase price remain commercially confidential and I am therefore withholding this information under Exemption 7 of the Code of Access to Government Information.

Solway Harvester

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received concerning the presence of Royal Navy vessels in the vicinity of the Harvester at the time of its sinking; and if he will make a statement. [107061]

Mr. Spellar: At the time of the tragic loss of the Solway Harvester the nearest vessel was the RFA Bayleaf, a tanker of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary. She was some 30 miles west of the Solway Harvester when the mayday was raised and took part in the rescue operation. There were no other Royal Navy vessels in the vicinity of the Isle of Man. There were no submarines in the area.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women from ethnic minority backgrounds are serving in each of the British armed services. [107121]

Mr. Spellar: As at 1 December 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 2,113 men and 210 women from ethnic backgrounds serving in the UK regular Armed Forces. The individual figures for each Service are:

	Men	Women
Naval Service	350	25
Army	1,219	136
RAF	544	49

Territorial Army

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the effects of the restructuring of the Territorial Army on the availability of the premises of the Territorial Army for use by other community activities, with particular reference to TA centres in rural Wales. [107130]

Mr. Spellar: The main purpose of Territorial Army Centres (TACs) is to train members of the TA, but links with local communities are greatly valued by the Army and, wherever practicable, local groups will continue to be allowed use of TACs.

Meat

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent measures his Department has taken to maximise the procurement of domestically produced meat for the armed forces. [107129]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The supply of food to our Armed Forces is contracted out to "3663" (formerly trading as Booker Foodservice). They are required to seek best market prices and, in doing so, to give full consideration to British products. As a result our contractor is currently sourcing all beef for consumption by our UK-based service personnel from British intervention stocks. In addition, 100 per cent. of our pork and some 50 per cent. of our bacon and gammon is being sourced in the UK. Our contractor has so far been unable to identify competitively priced sources of British lamb but continues to keep this under active review.

Cluster Munitions

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of each type of cluster munitions are held by (a) the Royal Air Force, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Army. [107273]

Mr. Spellar: I am withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to Defence, Security and International Relations.

Chinook Crash

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Air Accident Investigation Branch (a) considered and (b) ruled out the possibility of an uncommanded flying control movement, that left no trace as having occurred prior to the fatal crash of RAF Chinook 2D576 on the Mull of Kintyre in 1994. [107274]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bovine samples were sent from each country outside the United Kingdom to Weybridge Veterinary Laboratory since 1980; and what was the number of the samples from each country that were diagnosed with BSE in that period. [106323]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. T. Little, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Tim Yeo, dated 28 January 2000:

The Minister has asked me to respond to your question about bovine samples sent to the Veterinary Laboratories Agency, Weybridge since 1980 and the number of these samples diagnosed with BSE.

The VLA has, over a considerable period of time, provided Reference Laboratory facilities for the diagnosis of certain animal diseases and in this general context will have received bovine brain samples from countries outside the UK for a wide range of diagnostic purposes. In the more specific context of the diagnosis of BSE, no bovine samples would have been received from other countries for this purpose before the recognition of the disease in Britain in 1986. Since 1986 such bovine samples, in the form of brain tissue for either histopathological or electron microscopic examination, have been received from a number of countries.

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 343 cols. W385 - 574 24 January - 4 February 2000

The quantitative information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost, as it is contained only in paper case records in different sections of the Pathology Department of the VLA.

Such submissions have almost invariably been framed as requests from other countries for the diagnostic examination of material from their initial suspect cases of BSE. Because the VLA has provided training in the diagnosis of BSE for veterinary pathologists in many countries, requests for the examination of bovine samples of BSE have been confirmed at most to the initial few cases experienced in the country, with subsequent diagnosis being conducted by the countries own veterinary pathologists. Also, consultations on such material from other countries will not have been restricted to bovine samples sent to the VLA since opinions will have been sought from VLA veterinary pathologists and scientists whilst visiting other countries.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 30 September 1999 on behalf of his constituent Mr. Chambers. [105920]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 20 January 2000]: A reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire was sent on 25 November 1999.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Website

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to publish full text versions of new departmental documents on her Department's website. [106433]

Clare Short: Plans are under way to have the majority of DFID publications produced since May 1997 available in full text format on DFID's website.

All new DFID publications, as well as much of our research material, is already available through DFID's website in full text format.

Afghanistan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received concerning the situation of women's human rights in Afghanistan; and if she will make a statement. [107008]

Clare Short: Human rights issues are frequently covered in discussions on Afghanistan between my Department and other interested parties. We have had no specific representations on women's human rights recently.

We remain extremely concerned about abuses of human rights in Afghanistan. The people of Afghanistan, in particular women and children, have suffered immeasurably as a result of two decades of conflict, destruction and displacement. In pursuing its programme of humanitarian assistance to the Afghan people, DFID actively participates in the principled common programming approach under the United Nations-led Strategic Framework for Afghanistan. This approach is designed to ensure that assistance works towards the eradication of any form of discrimination, including, of course, gender discrimination.

Departmental Press Releases

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many Press releases her Department issued in each year from 1995 to 1999. [106119]

Clare Short: Number of press releases issued from 1995–99 are outlined as follows:

	Press releases
Issued by ODA
1995	71
1996	50
To May 1997	16
Issued by DFID
From May 1997	42

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Sure Start

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the geographical statistical unit being used to judge the outcome of the Sure Start areas. [103003]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 16 December 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

Sure Start will be judged on its outcomes for children, families and areas. The geographical statistical unit for which area outcomes will be judged will be the local Sure Start programme area.

Violent Pupils

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupil attacks on teachers were recorded in each of the years since 1992. [107478]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not available centrally.

Teacher Competencies

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the consultation document on teacher competencies that has been sent to the teacher trade unions together with a list of all those who have been consulted on the document. [107540]

Ms Estelle Morris: No consultation document has been published. As part of on-going discussions with teacher and headteacher unions about proposed reforms of the teaching profession, DfEE has had informal discussions about the standards which teachers would be required to meet in order to cross the proposed new performance threshold. We will write to School Teachers' Review Body statutory consultees during February 2000 to invite views on the proposed standards.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to receive the report by Hay McBer on teacher competencies and other aspects of performance-related pay; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [107536]

Ms Estelle Morris: DfEE expects to receive the final report from Hay McBer on the characteristics of effective teaching at the end of February 2000 and intends to publish it shortly thereafter, probably during March 2000. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Ofsted Inspections (LEAs)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those local education authorities on which Ofsted has reported, and the outcome of each report. [107537]

Ms Estelle Morris: To date, 55 Ofsted inspection reports have been published on 51 LEAs. A list of the LEAs inspected, including those that were re-inspected, is as follows. The Education Act 1997 requires each LEA to submit a post-Ofsted inspection action plan setting out how it intends to tackle the recommendations in its Ofsted inspection report. In a number of cases the Secretary of State has taken additional action as follows.

In Hackney, following reports by the consultants KPMG, the Secretary of State directed the LEA to outsource its School Improvement Service and Ethnic Minority Service to Nord Anglia.

In Islington, the consultancy firm PWC were appointed to prepare for the outsourcing of the LEA's services to schools, pupils and parents. On 14 January, Cambridge Education Associates were appointed to run the contract from April 2000.

In Leicester, City OPM were appointed to advise on next steps. The OPM report made several recommendations which are now being taken forward by the LEA, including the establishment of a Partnership Board to oversee Education Services.

In Liverpool, KPMG were appointed to advise on post-Ofsted action. As a result, a contract is being put in place between the schools and the Education Service which will include setting out exactly what services and standards schools can expect from each part of the Education Service. A monitoring and review board with an independent chair has also been set up.

Capita were appointed in Haringey and KPMG in Southwark to provide consultancy services on how best to improve both education services. Work is on-going in both LEAs. In Walsall and Bristol, we are in the process of appointing consultants to advise on the most appropriate course of action following the publication of their Ofsted reports.

Agency Teachers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many agency teachers were employed in each London borough on the day of census in January 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999 and 2000. [106690]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table shows the number of agency teachers, on contracts of less than one month, in each London borough at January 1996, 1997, 1998 and 1999, who worked for the whole of the census day in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector. Data for January 2000 are not yet available.

Classroom Assistants

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many classroom assistants were employed in schools in January 1998 and 1999. [107538]

Ms Estelle Morris: For schools in England, in January 1998 there were 101,660 full-time equivalent teaching assistants, and in January 1999 there were 108,050. These figures do not include assistants in nursery schools and independent schools.

Physics Teachers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent assessment he has made of shortages of physics teachers in secondary schools. [107132]

Ms Estelle Morris: In January 1999, there were just 22 vacancies for physics teachers in maintained secondary schools in England and Wales. The figure for January 1998 was 24. The vacancy rate for secondary science teachers was 0.5 per cent., the same as the overall secondary vacancy rate.

Grammar Schools (Barnet)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make available the data given by each Barnet grammar school to Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. in accordance with the petition and ballot on future admissions, listing each primary school from which one or more pupils originated before gaining a place at each Barnet grammar school, for the intakes of pupils in each of the last three years. [107024]

Ms Estelle Morris: A list of the schools from which at least one child has transferred to a Barnet grammar school during the last three academic years is listed.

School Places (Independent Sector)

Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places were bought from independent schools by his Department during 1998–99 outside the assisted places scheme; and at what cost. [107023]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under the Government's Music and Ballet Scheme and Choir School Scholarship Scheme, 693 aided places and 72 chorister places were supported at a total cost of £9.7 million in financial year 1998–99. Apart from the Assisted Places Scheme, the Department does not otherwise buy places directly from independent schools.

Teacher Training

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the average spending on teacher training provision by London education authorities during the current year. [107124]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is not collected centrally.

SCOTLAND

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106211]

Dr. Reid: Between April 1994 and March 1999, two cases of computer fraud were reported in the Scottish Office; neither case involved computer chips. There were also 26 cases of theft of computer equipment.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106235]

Dr. Reid: Between April 1994 and March 1999, there were no reported illegal accesses to Scottish Office computer systems from either inside or outside the Department.

Departmental Fees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the fees his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies collect; how much has been raised or it is anticipated will be raised from each of these fees from 1989–90 to 2004–05; and which of these fees count as negative expenditure. [106002]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The list of fees with income of £1 million or more collected by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions for 1997–98 and 1998–99 is as follows:

Fees from the following schemes can be used to part offset relevant expenditure:

Sale of Cherished Registration Marks
Assignment, Retention and Transfer of Registration Marks
Goods Vehicle Operator Licensing
Public Service Vehicle Operator Licensing

All the other fees listed can be used to offset relevant expenditure.

In some cases retained receipts will count as negative expenditure in national accounts aggregates, but in other cases they may score as tax revenues.

Further information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

A40

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reinstate improvements to the A40 in London in the roads programme. [106315]

Mr. Hill: In September 1998 we announced a three stage strategy involving local improvements at Western Circus, Gypsy Corner and the replacement of the narrow railway bridges and widening between Gypsy Corner and Western Circus to bring the road up to a consistent dual three lane standard. The work at Western Circus has been completed at Gypsy Corner is planned for later this year. Design work has started on the third stage and it is anticipated that this would start in about 2002. A decision on the start date for this project will be for Transport for London. There are no plans to reinstate the major schemes at Gypsy Corner and Western Circus which were cancelled in 1997.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what nugatory costs were incurred in relation to the cancelled improvement of the A40 in London. [106314]

Mr. Hill: The majority of the £27 million costs incurred for the cancelled schemes have been in acquiring land and properties over a long period and much of this will be recovered from its resale. Outline planning permission is being sought from the local authorities for its development following which the sale will take place. All other purchased properties which were not demolished have been or are about to be sold.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if land and buildings purchased for the purpose of improving the A40 in London will be retained. [106316]

Mr. Hill: Nearly all the land purchased for the cancelled scheme is to be sold. Some will be retained to enable the narrow bridges to be replaced.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of traffic jams on the A40 in West London upon (a) quality of life of adjoining residents, (b) pollution levels, (c) additional fuel consumption and (d) the cost to businesses and individuals. [106317]

Mr. Hill: The three stage improvement programme announced in September 1998 addresses all these concerns. The completion of the first stage at Western Circus has already brought benefits of improved traffic flows, particularly eastbound into London. It has also provided safer and pleasant conditions for local residents with improved pedestrian facilities and by the closure of some local roads onto the A40 to prevent rat-running.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the year on year increase in traffic holdups on the A40 in West London. [106318]

Mr. Hill: The Highways Agency, on behalf of the Secretary of State, monitors traffic flows on all trunk roads throughout the network, including the A40 in West London.

Westbound queues on the A40 in Acton have not changed significantly in the last decade, while eastbound queues have reduced significantly as a result of the improvements recently completed at Western Circus. The improvements planned at Gypsy Corner this year and the bridge replacements in 2002 will further improve traffic flow at this location.

Radioactivity

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) commissioned to determine the radioactivity levels and isotopic composition of PM10s or dust particles with a diameter of less than 10 microns. [105582]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 January 2000]: Radioactivity in the air is monitored for the DETR by contractors managed by the Environment Agency. As part of this programme, there is a network of high volume air samplers around the UK in which the particles in the air, including PM10s, are drawn onto the air filter papers and the long-lived radioactivity associated with those particles is measured. The Environment Agency publishes the results of this "fall-out" monitoring programme annually in "Radioactivity in the Environment".

It is known that the main radioactive species attached to PM10s in the air are short-lived decay products of the naturally occurring radioactive gas radon, which are addressed in the Government's radon programme.

Since 1987 some 400,000 measurements have been carried out in homes most likely to have elevated levels of radon and its decay products.

Earth Summit 3

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to support the inclusion of trade issues on the agenda of the Earth Summit 3 Conference in 2002; and if he will make a statement. [106866]

Mr. Meacher: The Earth Summit 3 Conference will be further considered at the meeting of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development in April, including the agenda.

We will continue to use all appropriate opportunities that arise through bilateral contacts and our involvement in multilateral fora to pursue our dialogue with other countries, especially developing countries, on the relationship between trade and the environment. This issue will also be discussed at this year's meeting of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

In addition, the United Kingdom will continue to press within the World Trade Organisation for the launch of a comprehensive Round of trade negotiations at the earliest possible opportunity, because we believe that a comprehensive Round offers the best means of delivering trade liberalisation in a manner consistent with the pursuit of global sustainable development and, in particular, delivering benefits for developing countries.

Safety Regulations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many and what type of enforcement notices were issued following failure to comply with (a) the Health and Safety Consultation of Employees Regulations 1996 and (b) the Safety Representatives and Safety Committee Regulations 1977 in each year since the regulations were in force. [106780]

Mr. Meacher: The numbers of requirements on enforcement notices under the Health and Safety (Consultation with Employees) Regulations 1996, and their type, issued by HSE inspectors for the years the regulations have been in force are given in the following table:

Requirements on notices issued by HSE under the Health and Safety (Consultation with Employees) Regulations 1996

	Type of notice
Year	Improvement	Immediate prohibition

[1] Provisional

According to available information, one improvement notice was issued by HSE inspectors under the Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 in 1984.

Information on enforcement notices issued by local authority inspectors, who also enforce these regulations, is not available on a regulation-by-regulation basis.

Gas-powered Vehicles

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of (a) the number of liquid petroleum gas-powered road vehicles in the UK and (b) the rate of growth in the market for liquid petroleum gas-powered road vehicles in the UK in the last year. [107002]

Mr. Hill: The DETR holds detailed information on the vehicle stock in Great Britain, which it receives from the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. It is not possible to identify precisely those vehicles that run on LPG. However, the record shows vehicles that run on either gas, or petrol and gas combinations and these are shown in the table.

	1998	1999	Increase (%)
Gas	2,598	2,766	6.0
Petrol/gas	8,589	12,617	47.0
Total	11,187	15,383	38.0

These data are for the end of June each year and are for Great Britain only. Similar information on Northern Ireland vehicles is not available.

Planning

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to (a) make it easier to relocate footpaths, (b) impose a time limit on definitive map claims and (c) permit green lanes to become bridleways. [107528]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's proposals for changes to rights of way legislation were set out in the consultation paper "Improving Rights of Way in England and Wales". The paper includes proposals on the relocation of footpaths, a time limit on definitive map claims and the reclassification of Roads Used as Public Paths.

We are now considering these proposals taking into account the comments in around 2,000 responses to the consultation paper, and we expect to introduce legislation to Parliament soon.

Rail Facilities (Grants)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what rail facilities grants are available to (a) rail operators and (b) commercial and industrial concerns who wish to gain better access to the rail network. [107347]

Mr. Hill: Two grants are available through my Department.

Freight Facilities Grant is available to any company facing higher costs as a result of choosing to move freight by rail rather than road. These grants assist with the capital costs often associated with rail movements (eg rail infrastructure and specialised loading/unloading equipment).

Additionally, Track Access Grants may be paid to rail operators to help defray Railtrack charges for access to the rail network in respect of traffic which would otherwise move by road.

Funding may also be provided from a number of other sources and agencies including Government Departments, Regional Development Agencies and the European Commission.

Public/Private Partnerships

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the public/private partnership schemes currently running in the Greater London area. [107119]

Mr. Hill: There are a total of 97 PFI public/private partnerships currently in progress in London. They are:

Best Value

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the total cost of preparation of best value performance plans by local authorities. [107178]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The costs of preparing best value performance plans depend on a wide variety of local factors, including authorities' current management assignments. Any such costs are expected to be offset by efficiency improvements, and will be monitored by my Department.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will produce a planning guidance note to establish what constitutes (a) brownfield and (b) greenfield sites in respect of a land disposal involving a combination of buildings and used ground and playing fields and undeveloped ground. [107154]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Our draft revision of the planning policy guidance on housing (PPG3), published in March 1999, contains a definition for the purposes of development. The final version of PPG3 will be published shortly. Guidance on the disposal of open space with recreational value is set out in PPG 17 on Sport and Recreation.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review current legislation on development on playing fields. [107171]

Ms Beverley Hughes: None. Planning Policy Guidance note 17 "Sport and Recreation" already emphasises the special significance of playing fields and that they should normally be protected. The Town and Country Planning (Playing Fields) (England) Direction 1998 requires referral to the Secretary of State of planning applications for development of local authority-owned playing fields or those currently, or in the previous five years, in educational use, where Sport England has objected but the local planning authority is minded to grant permission. The Secretary of State then has the opportunity to call in the application for his own determination.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that playing fields and green spaces in urban areas are not designated as brownfield sites for the purpose of housing and other development proposals. [107170]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Planning Policy Guidance note 17 "Sport and Recreation" emphasises the special significance of playing fields and that they should normally be protected. Forthcoming Planning Policy Guidance note 3 "Housing" will emphasise that local planning authorities should have clear policies for the protection of open spaces and playing fields.

National Routing Guide

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instruct the shadow Strategic Rail Authority to discuss with the Association of Train Operating Companies the coverage of the National Routing Guide. [107596]

Mr. Hill: The Association of Train Operating Companies are currently undertaking a thorough review of National Routing Guide. The shadow Strategic Rail Authority is a statutory consultee in this process and will ensure that passenger benefits are protected and extended where appropriate.

Highway Code

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses he received on his consultation for the new edition of the Highway Code. [107657]

Mr. Hill: 260 responses were received to the consultation on the new edition of the Highway Code.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106216]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Over the past five years there have not been any recorded cases of fraudulent use of computer chips, but the forty-seven reported incidents of theft include eight occasions when memory chips or like components were taken.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106229]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In the past five years there have been two known instances of illegal access to computer systems in my Department and its predecessors. Both occurred in 1995, one from within and the other from outside.

Call Centres

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the research into call centres by the Health and Safety Executive will be completed; and if the findings will be published. [107763]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Executive has asked the Health and Safety Laboratory to investigate the health risks associated with call centre working practices and to report by the end of 2000. The findings will inform published best practice guidance and decisions by the Health and Safety Executive on whether further action should be taken.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the research being undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive into working practices at call centres will (a) monitor the compliance of centres with the 1989 Noise at Work Regulations and (b) assess the level of hearing loss and tinnitus among call handlers. [107762]

Mr. Meacher: The research aims to identify and measure associated psychological and physical health risks (including from noise) and explore factors which may ameliorate them. The responsibility for monitoring compliance with the Noise at Work Regulations 1989 in call centres rests with local authorities.

Neighbourhood Councils

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy on neighbourhood councils. [107381]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government welcome initiatives to involve citizens in the local decisions that will affect their daily lives. It has on numerous occasions made clear its support for parish councils and area committees.

National Association of Local Councils

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those discussions that his Department had with the National Association of Local Councils over the last year. [107382]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Ministers and officials from this Department have had, on a range of occasions, discussions with the National Association of Local Councils over the last year at which a number of topics were discussed.

Road Speed Limits

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in considering permitting repeater signs to be allowed so as to reinforce the 30 mph speed limit; and if he will make a statement. [107760]

Mr. Hill: We are currently conducting a review of speed policy in which the issue of speed limit signing generally is being considered. The review is expected to report its findings shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Service

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many people have been recruited to the Civil Service since 1 May 1997; and how many have left the Civil Service since that date. [105975]

The Prime Minister: Information on entrants and leavers to the Civil Service are available on a financial year basis. This shows that in the period 1 April 1997 to 1 April 1999 55,950 people joined the non-industrial Civil Service and 66,512 people left it.

Tape Recordings

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what tape recordings are (a) routinely and (b) exceptionally made in 10 Downing Street. [107481]

The Prime Minister: Tape recordings of press briefings and Prime Ministerial interviews are made as and when appropriate.

European Commission

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if the European Commission document, "Reforming the Commission", will come before the Council of Ministers for discussion on approval; and what steps he will take to ensure it is implemented. [107492]

The Prime Minister: We expect there to be discussion of the proposals for Commission reform at the General Affairs Council on 14 February. We also expect the Council to outline its support and make clear the importance it attaches to the process of reforming the Commission.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the work of the Social Exclusion Unit. [107435]

The Prime Minister: I established the Social Exclusion Unit in December 1997. Since then it has produced reports and action plans on school exclusion and truancy, rough sleeping, poor neighbourhoods, teenage pregnancy and 16–18-year-olds not in education, employment or training.

The Unit was set up on a time-limited basis and its success was reviewed in the summer of 1999. I announced the results of this review in December 1999.

It was clear from both the quality of the Unit's work and its impact so far that there is a continuing role for it to play. I have therefore decided that it will continue in existence, and be reviewed again at the end of 2002.

I will announce a new work programme for the Unit in the summer, once its current project to develop a national strategy for neighbourhood renewal is completed.

Age Discrimination

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken since May 1997 to combat age discrimination; and if he will make a statement. [107145]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 January 2000]: The Government undertook a year long consultation on age discrimination in employment. The results were set out in the report "Action on Age" which was published in August 1998. One of the conclusions of the consultation was that a non-statutory Code of Practice could provide a useful tool for tackling age discrimination in employment.

A draft Code of Practice was developed with the help and advice of key partners including the CBI, TUC, Age Concern, IPD, and the Institute of Management. Consultation on the Code took place from November 1998 and the final version was launched in June 1999. The Code covers all aspects of employment, including recruitment, selection, training, development, redundancy and retirement, and provides detailed guidance and case studies to help employers to tackle age discrimination in their organisations. Over 40,000 copies have been distributed since its launch. It is being backed by a publicity campaign to promote good practice and practical help for employers wanting to adopt the principles set out in the Code. The effectiveness of the Code is being evaluated through a large scale research project which looks in detail at employer policies and practices in recruitment and employment and the impact this has on age diversity in their workforce. The results of the evaluation will be published in 2001.

Cabinet Committees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish an updated list of Ministerial Committees of the Cabinet and their membership. [107624]

The Prime Minister: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 21 December 1999, Official Report, column 504W.

Correspondence

Mr. Field: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters on (a) Government policy and (b) constituency matters Government Departments have received since 1 May 1997 from those Members of the House who have refused to take the oath of allegiance. [107630]

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters he received from members of the public in 1999; and how many of these were replied to by (a) his office and (b) him personally. [107631]

The Prime Minister: During 1999 my office received 465,432 letters and cards from members of the public—an increase of 84 per cent. over the previous year. The response to any correspondence is considered on an individual basis.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Enlargement

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department has had with European Commissioner Poul Nielson concerning the effect that enlargement will have on the European Union aid budget. [106434]

Clare Short: I have had several discussions with Commissioner Nielson about the EC aid budget, but not about EU enlargement.

In July 1999, EU Foreign ministers agreed that the Commission should table proposals for the overall division of the EC external assistance budget, to allow Council discussion of development priorities as a whole and an opportunity to focus more EC resources on the poorest countries. I have pressed Commissioner Nielson on this and on other EC development issues and will continue to do so. The disproportionate amount of EC aid going to richer countries, and the inertia of the EC in rectifying this, are unacceptable.

When the EU is enlarged to include new member states during the period 2000–06, the European Parliament and the Council, acting on a proposal from the Commission, will jointly adjust the multi-year budget ceilings to take account of expenditure requirements arising from the enlargement. Such adjustments are not expected to affect the aid budget.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, and (b) theft her Department has recorded in the last five years. [106212]

Clare Short: (a) We are not aware of any recorded cases of computer fraud in DFID over the last five years.

(b) Since 1995, there have been eight cases recorded of computer equipment being stolen from DFID. Of these, seven were thefts of laptop computers, and one was a case of memory chips being stolen from a number of PCs during a break in at DFID's London Headquarters building.

The breakdown of these incidents is as follows:

Year	Item	Value £
1995	Laptop stolen from a vehicle in Bosnia	1,000
	Computer memory chips stolen from 94VS	10,000
1997	Three laptops stolen from AH	3,000
1998	Two laptops stolen from 94VS	2,000
1999	Laptop stolen from 94VS	1,000

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in her Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside her Department. [106234]

Clare Short: There is no evidence of any illegal access to DFID computer systems over the past five years.

Kosovo

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department (a) promised and (b) provided to Pristina Hospital, Kosovo. [106437]

Clare Short: At the beginning of July 1999, a joint DFID/NHS assessment team visited Pristina University Hospital to identify key facilities that required immediate restoration, including infrastructure repair, provision of essential equipment, management support and training for health care professionals. We have agreed to carry out this programme of work and progress is well under way.

WALES

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106222]

Mr. Paul Murphy: From 1995 to 30 June 1999, the Welsh Office had no known cases of computer fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, but there was one incident of computer theft in 1996 when a portable computer was stolen.

From 1 July 1999 to date the Wales Office has had no known cases of computer fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, and no recorded cases of computer theft.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106226]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There have been no known instances of computer hackers illegally accessing the Department's computer system from either within or outside the Department, in any of the past five years. This relates to the Welsh Office from 1995 to 30 June 1999, and to the Wales Office from 1 July 1999 to date.

DEFENCE

British Troops (Kosovo)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he was first informed of defects in the small arms carried by British troops on active service in Kosovo. [104406]

Mr. Spellar: The SA80, carried by British troops on active service in Kosovo, is generally an effective weapon system and is currently planned to remain in service for the foreseeable future. We are, however, investigating potential improvements to the SA80 at present and I expect to receive recommendations in due course.

British Forces Broadcasting

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make funding available to British Forces Broadcasting Services to enable the temporary radio station for the Colchester Garrison to be made a permanent service. [107166]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor gave him in his reply on 21 July 1999, Official Report, column 533W. The trial will conclude later this year and the way ahead will then be assessed.

Air Cadets

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he had made of the contribution air cadet organisations make to the public's perception of the RAF. [107405]

Mr. Spellar: The Air Cadets are an integral part of communities nation-wide and make an important contribution to the public perception of the RAF.

Kosovo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the operation of Pristina airfield in Kosovo will be handed over to an ally; and to whom. [107087]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 27 January 2000]: British forces are scheduled to pass on their lead nation responsibilities for Pristina airfield in June 2000. It is currently expected that these responsibilities will be assumed by one or more of our NATO allies, although a final decision has not yet been taken.

RAF/ATC

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the relationship between the Royal Air Force and the Air Training Corps. [107406]

Mr. Spellar: The RAF commits significant resources to the Air Training Corps, in recognition of its importance as a highly successful national youth organisation, as a significant contributor to the public's perception of the RAF, and a source of high quality recruits to the Services.

Nancekuke

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 18 January 2000,

Official Report, column 823, for what reason the (a) health and (b) other records of everyone employed at Nancekuke have not been kept. [106748]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 24 January 2000]: In my statement, I explained that we are not aware of any comprehensive database from which to obtain the sum total of people employed at Nancekuke over the period in question. It is, however, the case that at least some individual personal files relating to former employees at Nancekuke have been kept and are held at the Defence Storage and Distribution Centre (Llangennech). We are not aware of the whereabouts of any separate medical records.

Earl's Court

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department paid for the use of the Earl's Court facilities in each of the last five years. [106500]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The MOD has not incurred any expenditure for the use of the Earl's Court facilities over the last five years.

Service Personnel (NHS Treatment)

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what priority service personnel are given for treatment within the National Health Service. [107446]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Helicopter Flying School

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of the PFI contract at the Defence Helicopter Flying School; and what is the length of the contract. [100284]

Mr. Spellar: The value of the Defence Helicopter Flying School PFI contract is in the region of £500 million at current prices. I am withholding the exact value of the contract under Exemption 11 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The contract period is 15 years from 1 April 1997.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Employment Relations Act 1999

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which sections of the Employment Relations Act 1999 have been implemented and on what date; and what is the timetable for the implementation of the remaining sections. [107477]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The table shows which sections of the Employment Relations Act 1999 have been brought into force and on what date.

Sch.7 (partially)	Employment agencies	25 October 1999	1999/2830
Sch.9 (partially)	Repeals	25 October 1999	1999/2830

The Maternity and Parental Leave etc. Regulations (S.I. 1999/3312) were made on 10 December 1999 under powers in the Employment Rights Act 1996, as amended by sections 7 and 9 and Schedule 4 of the Employment Relations Act 1999. They came into force on 15 December 1999.

The first order under section 34 of the 1999 Act, the Employment Rights (Increase of Limits) Order (S.I. 1999/3375) was made on 17 December 1999 and will come into force on 1 February 2000.

The Government's intentions for implementing the remaining provisions of the 1999 Act were set out in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) on 21 October 1999, Official Report, column 613W.

Photovoltaics

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the economic (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages of a public support scheme for solar electricity such as that which operates in Germany. [107480]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 290W.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which solar photovoltaic applications can be connected to the national grid via a regular socket; what statutory powers apply to such connections; and what assessment he has made of their potential contribution to meeting the Government's target of achieving 10 per cent. of electricity supply from renewable sources by 2010. [107479]

Mrs. Liddell: Under the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988 (SI 1057 and amendments), "no person may operate a generating plan in parallel with a Regional Electricity Company's (REC's) [Public Electricity Supplier's (PES's)] system without the written agreement of the REC [PES]". This includes small PV generators connected to a socket outlet.

Technical requirements for connection of embedded generators are covered by Engineering Recommendation G59—"Recommendations for the Connection of Embedded Generating Plant to the Regional Electricity Companies' Distribution Systems"—published by the Electricity Association. Following discussions between the electrical supply and photovoltaic industries, we understand that the Electricity Association are shortly to publish a draft Engineering Recommendation G77—"UK Technical Guidelines for Inverter Connected Single-Phase Photovoltaic (PV) Generators up to 5kVA". In both documents it is implied that a fixed connection should be made from the embedded generator to an appropriate connection point at, or leading to, the distribution system.

With respect to the second part of the question, I refer my hon. Friend to a recent assessment by my Department. This has been reported in "New & Renewable Energy: Prospects in the UK for the 21st Century. Supporting Analysis. March 1999. ETSU R-122". We have not carried out any specific assessment looking at PV systems connected to socket outlets.

UK Competitiveness Indicators

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he proposes to address the criticism of United Kingdom management made in his report, the United Kingdom Competitiveness Indicators 1999; and if he will make a statement. [106521]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Secretary of State for Education and Employment have decided to establish the Council for Excellence in Management and Leadership, under the Chairmanship of Sir Anthony Cleaver, with the overall aim of enabling UK managers to attain and sustain world class performance. It will achieve this by identifying the main issues for management and leadership and the key stakeholders who need to take action. It will address, in particular, the needs of small firms. The Council will review the quality of management education and training, advise on action to be taken, and report annually to Government and stakeholders on progress.

Electricity Generators

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many non-fossil fuel obligation electricity generators projects failed to receive planning permissions between 1 May 1997 and 31 December 1999. [107379]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 28 January 2000]: On the best available information, out of 129 determinations, 19 Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) projects have been refused planning permission between 1 May 1997 and 30 November 1999, the latest date to which we have planning information.

Aerospace Equipment Manufacturers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of extending launch aid to aerospace equipment manufacturers. [107565]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Launch investment is a risk-sharing Government investment in specific civil aerospace projects in the UK, enabled by the provisions of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. It has been used to support the design and development of airframes (or parts of airframes, such as wings), helicopters and aeroengines. The investment is not a grant and is repayable to the Government at a real rate of return, usually via levies on sales of the product developed. Large aerospace projects typically have high costs, pose a high level of risk, and generate a return only in the long-term. This has created a market deficiency in the availability of development funds for such projects. Launch investment remedies this, and also recognises the international mobility of aerospace projects, and the significant financial incentives that are available in other countries.

Any UK aerospace company can apply for launch investment, and each application is considered on its merits against a range of established criteria and also, by the Treasury, against public expenditure constraints. An applicant must demonstrate that the project is technically and commercially viable; that Government investment is essential for the project to proceed in the UK on the scale and in the timescale specified in the application; and that Government will recoup the investment at a real rate of return. Finally, the Government must be persuaded that support for the project will lead to major strategic advantages to the UK economy.

Synchrotron Radiation Facility

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost of the report produced by ADD Consultants on the appraisal of options for the site of the proposed new synchrotron radiation facility. [107396]

Ms Hewitt: The cost of the report produced by ADD Consultants, Investment Appraisal for Options for the Site of the Proposed New Synchrotron Facility, delivered to Office of Science and Technology in June 1999, was £7,203 including VAT.

Asteroid Task Force

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the objectives of the Asteroid Task Force are; and when it plans to (a) make its first report and (b) complete its work. [107482]

Ms Hewitt: The objectives of the Near Earth Objects Task Force are to:

1. confirm the nature of the hazard and the potential level of risk;
2. identify the current UK contribution to the international efforts;
3. advise HMG on what further action to take in the light of 1 and 2 and on the communication issues to the public.

I expect to receive the report of the Task Force this summer.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated annual running cost of the Asteroid Task Force. [107485]

Ms Hewitt: No on-going annual cost for the Near Earth Objects Task Force is envisaged. We expect to receive the Task Force's report this summer.

Ex-miners (Coal Allowance)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the average tonnage of coal delivered to eligible ex-miners for the last full year for which figures are available. [107531]

Mrs. Liddell: The average tonnage of fuel delivered to all beneficiaries under the terms of the National Concessionary Fuel Agreement and BACM Agreement during the year 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999 was four tonnes.

Electricity Cabling

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 524W, what is the expected life of electricity cabling. [107111]

Mrs. Liddell: Electricity cables do not have a single age at which they cease to be functional; instead there is a range of ages. As could be seen in my previous answer, it is not uncommon for cables to be installed and functioning for well in excess of 50 years. From information collected at the time of the last review of distribution companies, the "age" at which cables are replaced ranges from about 45 years to over 100 years.

As with all assets, cables are replaced on condition and not just because they reach a certain age.

Post Office Employees

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the percentage of (a) registered disabled people, (b) women, (c) people from ethnic minorities and (d) people from (i) independent schools, (ii) grammar schools and (iii) other schools that worked for the Post Office in each of the years (i) 1970, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1989 and (iv) 1999. [107011]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The Post Office have supplied the following data on employees in 1999 derived from information voluntarily supplied on application forms:

	Percentage
Registered disabled	1.5
Women	20
Ethnic minorities	8.6

These percentages relate only to Post Office employees and do not include sub-postmasters. Historic data for earlier years is not readily available and details of educational establishments attended are not held.

Arms Sales (Zimbabwe)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many representatives of arms manufacturers have made representations to (a) him, (b) his advisers and (c) officials about arms sales to Zimbabwe over the last 17 months; and if he will list the individuals and companies concerned, indicating the dates on which representations were made; [106939]

(2) if he will list the (a) people and (b) organisations representing defence manufacturers who have made representations to his Department about arms sales to Zimbabwe over the last 17 months; and when such representations were made. [106949]

Dr. Howells: No such representations have been made to any Minister or special adviser in this Department, or relevant officials in the Export Credit Guarantees Department, the Export Control Organisation or the Engineering Industries Directorate of my Department, or the relevant export promotion directorate of British Trade International.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the sale of spare parts for Hawk jets to Zimbabwe will be covered by a loan from the Export Credits Guarantee Department. [108059]

Mr. Caborn: No.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Environmental Impact Assessment on the Ilisu Hydro-Electric project in Turkey will be (a) completed and (b) published. [107014]

Mr. Caborn: The Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) is expected to be completed in March/April and made publicly available shortly thereafter.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the compliance of the Ilisu Dam project with guidelines of the World Bank for (a) ECGD and (b) developmental support. [107019]

Mr. Caborn: We are only considering ECGD support for the Ilisu Dam; as this is not a development project, such support, if agreed, will not be conditional on compliance with World Bank guidelines, although we are looking for international guidelines to be reflected in the approach to the project. The statement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry of 21 December outlined four main concerns, which we require to see addressed before a decision is made on ECGD support. These are:

resettlement
water quality downstream water flow preservation of the archaeological heritage of Hasankeyf

We have published two reports commissioned to assist with the decision making process and await the outcome of further work including a full Environmental Impact Assessment Report.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the compliance of the Ilisu Dam project with the criteria of the UN Convention on the Non-Navigational Uses of Transboundary Waterways. [107020]

Mr. Caborn: The assessment of such compliance is a matter which will need to be addressed. The statement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry of 21 December, raised as one of our concerns the issue of assuring the maintenance of downstream flows.

Sellafield

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the report of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate investigation into the operating practices of the Sellafield MOX Demonstration Facility. [106710]

Mrs. Liddell: I understand that HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate is preparing a report which it will publish in mid February.

Utilities Bill

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any financial limit is to be placed upon the level of compensation for loss of office which he can determine should be paid to the Chairman and other members of the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority under Schedule 4, paragraph 4(3) of the Utilities Bill; and if he will make a statement. [107664]

Mrs. Liddell: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Schedule 1, not Schedule 4, of the Utilities Bill.

There is no statutory limit to the level of compensation that may be determined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. the level of compensation will depend on the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the categories of misbehaviour on the part of the Chairman of the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority which could give grounds for removal from office under Schedule 1, paragraph 3(2)(b) of the Utilities Bill include refusal to follow his advice; and if he will make a statement. [107666]

Mrs. Liddell: No. There is no change from the equivalent Electricity Act 1989 and Gas Act 1985 provisions in this respect.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any financial limit is to be placed on the level of remuneration and allowances which he can determine should be paid to the Chairman and members of the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority under Schedule 1, paragraph 4, of the Utilities Bill; and if he will make a statement. [107663]

Mrs. Liddell: There will be no statutory limit. Remuneration and allowances will be determined having regard to the need to recruit and retain individuals with the necessary qualities and experience.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people have benefited from the national minimum wage since its introduction in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire; and if he will make a statement. [107251]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 3 January 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question regarding the number of people who have benefited from the national minimum wage since its introduction in Shrewsbury and Atcham, and Shropshire.

Definitive estimates on the number of people that have benefited from the national minimum wage are not yet available. Currently available estimates for assessing the effect take data from both the New Earnings Survey and the Labour Force Survey and adjust them for known limitations in each. However, the latest adjusted estimates are based on data for the spring (March - May) 1999 Labour Force Survey and this period spans the introduction date for the national minimum wage legislation. As a result, the adjusted estimates may be giving a misleading picture of the effect of the minimum wage legislation since employees might legitimately have been earning below the minimum wage rates in March 1999.

The currently available estimates were published in an ONS First Release on 14 October and show that the number of people earning below the minimum wage rates fell significantly between 1998 and 1999. A copy of this first release is available in the House of Commons Library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Inspections

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will publish a copy of the questionnaire used by Ofsted inspectors in seeking the views of schools on the effectiveness of their local education authority as part of the local education authority inspection process; [107621]

(2) if he will publish a summary analysis of the questionnaire results showing schools' views of local education authorities for all authorities that have been inspected by Ofsted to date; [107622]

(3) if he will make available to any local education authority that requests it a copy of the summary analysis of the questionnaire results showing schools' views of their local education authority as part of the Ofsted inspection process. [107623]

Ms Estelle Morris: Copies of the questionnaire seeking the views of schools on the effectiveness of their local education authority as part of the local education authority inspection process are available from: the LEA Inspections Team, the Audit Commission, 1 Vincent Square, London SW1 2PN. I have also placed a copy in the Libraries of the House.

A copy of the summary analysis of the school survey results is given to the local education authority by the inspection team during the inspection. Further copies will be supplied to the authority on request by the Audit Commission.

No up-to-date summary analysis of the school survey results for all local education authorities inspected by Ofsted and the Audit Commission to date exists at present. This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, Chris Woodhead. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Libraries.

Members of Devolved Governments

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he has determined whether the activities of Members of the Scottish Parliament, the National Assembly for Wales, the Northern Ireland Assembly and the Greater London Assembly will constitute paid employment for the purposes of Access to Work. [107300]

Ms Hodge: Members of the Scottish Parliament, Assembly Members in Wales, Members of the Legislative Assembly in Northern Ireland and Members of the Greater London Assembly will all be paid for their work, and this constitutes paid employment for the purposes of the Access to Work programme in Great Britain and the equivalent scheme in Northern Ireland.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to disseminate examples of good practice among (a) employers and (b) service providers in meeting their obligations to make reasonable adjustments in a practical and cost-effective way, in connection with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [106202]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 makes it unlawful for employers and providers of goods, facilities and services to discriminate against disabled people by treating them less favourably than other people, or by failing to make reasonable adjustments. For service providers, the new Code of Practice which we published on 29 June 1999 explains the duties under Part III of the Act and gives practical guidance on how to prevent discrimination against disabled people, including examples of good practice. In October 1999, we published an information booklet called "An Introduction for Small and Medium-sized Businesses", explaining the new and existing duties on businesses and organisations under Part III of the DDA. For employers, there has been an employment Code of Practice since 1996. More recently, we have published a booklet called "Employing Disabled People: A Good Practice Guide for Managers and Employers", which contains examples of good practice and this has been promoted by the Federation of Small Businesses to its members. The examples it contains are based on 40 case studies that were published following a DfEE-funded research project, in a report called "Integrating Disabled Employees".

The Secretary of State launched the "See the Person" campaign, in June 1999, to publicise the DDA and the rights of disabled people. It is specifically aimed at increasing awareness among businesses and disabled people of the requirements and opportunities provided by the DDA, as well as more generally aiming to improve the public's understanding of the barriers faced by disabled people. The campaign has included TV adverts, posters, articles in various publications, radio advertisements and articles in national, regional and specialist press. It helps promote the DDA Helpline from which employers and service providers can obtain copies of the booklet and guide mentioned previously as well as further information about the Act and the Codes of Practice.

EU Handbooks

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy on teachers contributing to handbooks funded by the EU on EU policy; what United Kingdom input there was to "Euroquest-A Trail of Questions and Answers about the European Union"; and how many copies have been printed for distribution in the United Kingdom. [105694]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 18 January 2000]: The UK Government do not have a policy on teachers contributing to handbooks funded by EU on EU policy. The institutions of the European Union are free to approach any UK or European citizen to ask them to contribute to their publications.

I understand that the Euroquest booklet was funded entirely by the Representation of the European Commission in the UK, and that the content of the booklet was produced in collaboration with a number of UK educationalists and the Central Bureau for International Education and Training. It is designed as an activity book to support teachers in their work on the National Curriculum at Key Stage 2, and is intended to provide stimulus to further classroom discussion. One million copies were produced and approximately half have been distributed to schools on request.

National Learning Targets

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the national learning targets and the current policies against target for each and all other targets set by his Department. [107539]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 28 January 2000]: My Department's Public Service Agreement (PSA), published in the Department's Annual Report, sets out its key performance targets. The DfEE Annual Report and the Annual Report of the Employment Service also include other performance-related information. Targets for Agencies and Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies can be found annually in the Next Steps Report and Executive and Non-Departmental Public Bodies Report on the Stationary Office website. My Department has also published a Strategic Framework to 2002 "Learning and Working Together for the Future", setting out the aim and objectives, targets and supporting policies for that period; and a leaflet, "National Learning Targets for England for 2002", and the publication "National Learning Targets Action Plan", setting out the Government's National Learning Targets to 2002.

World Education Forum

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will attend the World Education Forum to be held in Senegal in April. [107426]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will not attend the World Education Forum. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has stated previously that she will participate.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the private finance initiative on reductions in numbers of school playing fields. [107165]

Jacqui Smith: Section 77 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 prevents local authorities and governing bodies from disposing, or changing the use, of school playing fields, without the prior consent of the Secretary of State. Section 77 applies also where such disposal or change of use is required as part of an approved PFI scheme.

PFI and other Public Private Partnerships (PPPs) encourage schools to make the most of their assets in collaboration with the private sector and in the interest of their pupils. That interest is not served by selling off those playing fields which children need for sport. Indeed, many PPP proposals are specifically aimed at upgrading school sports facilities.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of school playing fields are capable of sustaining minimum standards of seven hours a week use. [107158]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many private finance initiative schemes for schools have involved the sale of parts of school playing fields. [107157]

Jacqui Smith: Contracts have been awarded on eight schools' projects in England under the Private Finance Initiative, six of which are for building projects covering new or replacement single schools and two of which are for Local Education Authority-wide service contracts. None of these schemes has involved the sale of parts of school playing fields.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review Circular 3/99, relating to the protection of school playing fields. [107162]

Jacqui Smith: The Government will review Circular 3/99, "The Protection of School Playing Fields", during the Spring, with a view to announcing any changes in June.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions have taken place with national bodies with expertise in related matters since the issuing of Circular 3/99. [107160]

Jacqui Smith: The three national bodies cited in Circular 3/99, "The Protection of School Playing Fields", are the National Playing Fields Association, the Central Council of Physical Recreation (CCPR) and Learning through Landscapes. Since the Circular was published on 7 June 1999, Ministers have met with the CCPR and officials have held several meetings, and corresponded, with all three organisations.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school playing fields or parts of fields have been sold since the issue of Circular 3/99; and if he will make a statement on its impact on sales of playing fields. [107161]

Jacqui Smith: Since the issue of Circular 3/99, the Secretary of State has approved 13 applications to sell areas of land affecting sports pitches at schools. Of these, six involved sports pitches at closed schools and a further three provided new or improved sports facilities including, in one case, a new sports hall. In the four remaining applications, the sales proceeds have all been reinvested for educational purposes.

The introduction in Circular 3/99 of strict criteria against which decisions are made has been a great success. Since the issue of this Circular, the Department has received an average of just five applications a month to dispose or change the use of sports pitches. Not all of these applications involve the loss of a playing field. For example, some are for transfers of ownership or involve acquiring new replacement pitches. Authorities now see how tough our criteria are and generally bring forward only those proposals which make all round sense.

After-school Clubs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many after-school clubs there are in England and Wales. [107122]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are committed to supporting after-school-hours provision to support pupils' learning and to provide child care for working parents.

DfEE does not itself collate information on the number of out-of-school child care clubs which have been set up, but Kids' Clubs Network estimate that there are now around 5,000 such schemes in England and Wales. In addition, the New Opportunities Fund has so far made awards to 361 new or expanded out-of-school child care clubs in England and Wales.

In England, research shows that 98 per cent. of primary and 99 per cent. of secondary schools already provide out-of-school-hours learning activities for their pupils. The New Opportunities Fund has already made grants covering 957 schools in England to help them provide more and better activities and by 2001 will have supported at least a quarter of primary and half of all secondary and special schools. From April this year, schools in disadvantaged areas will also be able to benefit from a new Standards Fund grant to help them fund out-of-school-hours learning. Out-of-school-hours learning in Wales is a matter for the Welsh Assembly.

School Security

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about school security. [107063]

Jacqui Smith: We take the issue of school security very seriously. The Working Group on School Security, set up after the fatal stabbing of Philip Lawrence in December 1995, continues to meet on a regular basis to advise on school security matters. Most of the Group's recommendations, published in its report in May 1996, have been implemented. One of those recommendations was that money should be made available specifically for school security improvements. I announced last month that £22 million would be made available in 2000–01 for school security, building on the £66 million that has been made available over the past three years.

School Exclusions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many year 11, 10 and 9 pupils were excluded from schools in London and the South East in the academic year 1998–99. [106758]

Jacqui Smith: The Department is currently collecting information on the number of permanent exclusions in 1998–99 in maintained primary, secondary and special schools. Provisional information will be published in a Statistical First Release in May.

The latest available information on the number of pupils aged 13, 14 and 15 who were permanently excluded from schools in the London and South East Government Office Regions is shown in the following table.

Number and percentage of permanent exclusions for pupils aged 13, 14 and 15 in the Greater London and South East Government Office Regions 1997–98

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Standards

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to raise the performance of those prisons that are identified as performing to a poor standard. [108117]

Mr. Straw: In the last year, the Prison Service has enhanced its management of under-performing prisons. To strengthen this development, I am announcing today the establishment of a working group on Targeted Performance Improvement. Its terms of reference are to develop proposals for enhancing management arrangements to identify failing prisons; develop special measures to improve performance within such establishments, including effective partnerships with other criminal justice agencies and the private voluntary sectors; and develop a management tool to support the more rigorous line management of all establishments; including ways of recognising good performance and disseminating best practice with particular reference to the development of community partnerships in the locality of each.

The working group is chaired by Lord Laming and its other members are Phil Wheatley, Deputy Director General; Roger Brook, former head of the Audit Commission; Patrick Carter, non-executive Director of the Prison Service; and Una Padel, of the Centre for Crime and Justice Studies. I have asked the noble Lord, Lord Laming to report to him and the Director General by 1 May this year.

West Mercia Police Authority

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers West Mercia Police Authority had in the Worcester Division, in each year from 1992 to date. [107009]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available information, which is set out in the table, has been provided by the Chief Constable of West Mercia. It is not possible for the force to provide comparable information on police numbers at Divisional level for 1992 to 1996 because of force re-organisation in 1997.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of animals in testing household products. [106992]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have a responsibility for public and environmental safety. Some regulatory safety evaluations require the use of protected animals where there are no viable alternatives. A number of the substances in current use pose risks either through normal use or, in the case of solvents and glues, for example, through misuse. European directives have a bearing on the requirements to test both new and existing substances and products for manufacture, transport, sale and use. This includes household products for which a regulatory requirement applies.

The need for testing household products on animals is to be considered by the Animal Procedures Committee as part of its planned work on the cost/benefit assessment carried out under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

1,477 scientific procedures and 1,448 animals were used for this purpose in Great Britain during 1998, the last year for which figures are available. In 1997, comparable figures were 2,026 procedures and 2,004 animals. As with any other scientific procedure under the 1986 Act, animals are used to test household products only where necessary and where there are no alternatives.

Chinese President (State Visit)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the policing of the arrangements for the state visit of the Chinese President. [107733]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office has received a number of representations on this issue, including approximately 320 items of public correspondence and over 100 letters from Members of Parliament.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what objectives were set for the policing of the state visit of the Chinese President by (a) the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police and (b) the Home Office; and what assessment he has made of the Metropolitan Police's performance in meeting those objectives. [107115]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Metropolitan Police's intention with regard to the policing of the visit of the Chinese President was to police events in a manner compatible with their Statement of Common Purpose and Values by endeavouring to: ensure the security of Her Majesty the Queen, the distinguished visitors and all participants; facilitate the arrival and dispersal of all persons taking part in the Ceremonies; provide crowd control, ensuring public safety and preventing disorder so as not to impair the dignity of the Ceremonies; control traffic and minimise congestion; provide advice and assistance to members of the public and prevent crime, or if crime is committed, take all reasonable steps to apprehend offenders.

No objectives were set by the Home Office for the visit.

The Metropolitan Police Commissioner has indicated that the conclusions of a review of the policing arrangements will be made public and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will consider these in due course.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he has given the Metropolitan Police on their operational procedure in the light of the state visit of the Chinese President to London. [107117]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Paediatric Pathology

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce paediatric pathology for the post-mortem examination of children; and if he will make a statement. [107569]

Mr. Boateng: Responsibility for the choice of pathologist for a coroner's post-mortem lies in law with the coroner. In cases of child deaths, the Home Office has, for over 10 years, drawn to the attention of coroners the advantages of using pathologists with appropriate skills and training in paediatric pathology.

CCTV

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to local authorities regarding the application of Article 8 of the Human Rights Convention to CCTV (a) in privately owned shopping malls and (b) elsewhere. [107123]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) schemes funded by the Home Office are governed by codes of practice and data protection legislation to ensure that the systems are operated fairly and lawfully, and with due regard to individual rights to privacy, as provided in Article 8 of the European Convention of Human Rights.

The Human Rights Act 1998 will give further effect in United Kingdom law to the rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Convention. A properly regulated and controlled CCTV system should fully comply with the requirements of the Act.

The Data Protection Registrar is consulting on a draft code of practice, for users of public space CCTV systems, on the standards to be met to comply with their legal obligations under the Act. The intention is to issue the Code later in the year.

Advice on the impact of the new data protection and human rights legislation will be included in the prospectus for the next round of the CCTV Initiative, which we will issue in the spring.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money from the Government's CCTV initiative for England and Wales he estimates will be allocated to the London Borough of Tower Hamlets; and when the money will be made available. [107118]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Tower Hamlets Crime Reduction Partnership has three proposals under consideration in the first round of Crime Reduction Programme Closed Circuit Television Initiative, covering: car parks at the London Hospital (£319,000 sought); a borough-wide mobile Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) system (£193,000 sought); and an extension to CCTV coverage in Brick Lane and the surrounding areas (£501,000).

The Home Office Crime Reduction Unit has asked the partnership to provide further information in support of the bids, and funding decisions will be made as soon as possible after this has been provided. Grant payments will be made to the successful schemes at the appropriate stages of implementation.

The partnership will have an opportunity to submit further proposals under the next phase of funding under the CCTV Initiative, details of which will be announced in the spring.

Reconviction Statistics

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list, for the most recent 12 months for which figures are available, the percentage of offenders whose age at the time of discharge from prison or commencement of a non-custodial order was (a) under 21 years, (b) 21 to 24 years, (c) 25 to 29 years and (d) aged 30 years or over, who were reconvicted within two years of (i) discharge from prison, (ii) commencement of a probation order, (iii) commencement of a community service order and (iv) commencement of a combination order, indicating the percentage reconviction figures for each age group in respect of each disposal; [107051]

(2) if he will list for the most recent 12 months for which figures are available the percentage of offenders with (a) no previous convictions, (b) one or two previous convictions, (c) three to six previous convictions, (d) seven to 10 previous convictions and (e) 11 or more previous convictions who have been reconvicted (i) within two years of discharge from prison, (ii) within two years from commencement of a probation order, (iii) within two years of commencement of a community service order and (iv) within two years of commencement of a combination order. [107050]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The most recently available relevant information relates to reconvictions in samples of prisoners discharged from prison in 1995 and of offenders commencing community penalties in the first quarter of 1995.

The source of this information on reconviction is the Home Office Offenders Index. This does not contain information on cautioning of offenders. It should be borne in mind that this information relates to reconviction rather than reoffending.

Table 1: All offenders reconvicted[1], by age at discharge from custody or commencement of a community penalty[2], within two years of discharge or commencement during 1995

England and Wales — Percentage reconvicted

[1] The number reconvicted includes only those reconvicted for standard list offence.

[2] Community penalty figures relate to the first quarter of 1995.

Jill Dando

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent progress of the police investigation into the murder of Jill Dando. [107257]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The investigation of crime within the Metropolitan Police District is an operational matter for the Commissioner. He informs me that the investigation into the murder of Jill Dando is continuing.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of police officers as at 1 January in each of the last five years in each police division in London (a) for each area, (b) for each borough and (c) in total. [107152]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 457W.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in each London borough per 10,000 of population as measured in the 1991 Census, on 1 January in each of the last five years. [107174]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Figures provided by the Commissioner of the Metropolitan police are shown in the following table:

Numbers of locally based police officers per 10,000 of population

London borough	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999

These numbers exclude officers deployed on non-local duties, e.g. on Areas or specialist Units.

Electronic Tracking

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many early release prisoners have been fitted with an electronic tracking device; and how many have been given permission to breach the evening curfew restrictions. [107169]

Mr. Boateng: Up to midnight on 26 January, a total of 16,242 offenders had been placed on Home Detention Curfew since the commencement of the scheme on 28 January 1999.

The electronic monitoring service is provided by private sector contractors operating to strict Home Office guidelines. The contractors may grant "one-off" absences in specified circumstances, which must be capable of being verified and documented. The circumstances are clearly laid out in their contract and are currently as follows:

Circumstances in which emergency medical treatment for the curfewee or his/her immediate dependants is required;

An irregular or unexpected medical appointment for the offender or his/her immediate dependants;

A requirement, as part of the curfewee's permanent employment, to work at short notice, and where there would be insufficient time to contact the prison governor. The contractor is required to receive written verification from the employer that the work was required and took place;

Any absence caused by the curfewee being detained in police custody;

Attending the marriage or funeral of a close relative;

Attendance at a job interview, job club or benefit office, or elsewhere to "sign on" in connection with any claims for financial assistance; and

Attendance at court as a witness or as a defendant.

Other than in the event of these "one-off" absences, contractors have no discretion to grant permission to be absent from the place of curfew during the specified curfew period.

Information about the number of cases in which contractors have agreed to a "one-off" absence is not held centrally.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106236]

Mr. Straw: Official records compiled under the Government scheme for reporting Information Technology (IT) security incidents show the following attempts were made to gain unauthorised access to the Department's systems over the past five years:

None of these attempts resulted in any damage to the integrity of IT systems.

Police (Hearing Impairment)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1999, Official Report, column 273W, concerning hearing impairment of police officers, (a) how many Metropolitan Police officers in the last two years have received negligence compensation payments due to developing a hearing loss or tinnitus as a result of their work duties and (b) what is the total amount that the Metropolitan Police Force have paid out in the last two years in compensation payments to police officers who have developed a hearing loss or tinnitus as a result of their duties. [107302]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that details of the number of negligence compensation payments or the amounts paid to officers who have developed a hearing loss or tinnitus as a result of their duties are held on individual case files, but are not aggregated in the form requested.

Departmental Consultation

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public consultation exercises on policy matters carried out by his Department and its agencies in each of the last five years; who was consulted and by what means; how responses were analysed; how and in what form the results were transmitted to those responsible for the consultation; how the results of the consultation were published; and what analysis has been carried out of the extent and nature of policy changes resulting from the consultation. [106298]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is not available centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Since May 1997, the Home Office has, however, consulted on a wide range of issues. The Government welcome the views of the public on proposed new policies and initiatives and is committed to consulting through a variety of means, including Consultation Documents, Green Papers and documents published on the internet. Consultation Papers have included papers on: Tackling delays in the youth justice system (1997); Racial violence and harassment (1997); Supporting families (1998); Juries in serious fraud trials (1998); New measures to control prostitutes' cards in phone boxes (1999); and Possible changes to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme (1999).

Between 1995 and May 1997, the Consultation Papers published by the Home Office included papers on: Identity Cards (1995); Proposed changes to betting licensing (1995); Casino deregulation (1996); and, Clarification of the law relating to the bribery of Members of Parliament (1996).

Women Prisoners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to ensure that women sentenced to prison terms are allowed time to put their families' affairs in order before their sentences begin. [106187]

Mr. Boateng: Section 1 of the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 enables a court to defer passing sentence on an offender only to enable it to have regard to the offender's conduct after conviction or to any change in circumstances. There is no power to defer sentence to enable people to arrange child care, and such a change would require primary legislation.

Where a custodial sentence is likely to be imposed, National Standards require the writers of pre-sentence reports to identify any expected adverse effects for offenders and their family, including the issue of child care where appropriate.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to remodel under-used open prison facilities for the use of women prisoners and their children. [106186]

Mr. Boateng: In September 1997 the Director General of the Prison Service announced a review of five open prisons. The review was initiated against a background of a rising prisoner population which indicated the need to provide more spaces in secure accommodation, in particular the creation of more female places.

The review is specifically required to consider the feasibility of re-roling Morton Hall male open prison to a closed female prison, and upgrading the security of Drake Hall open female prison to that of a closed female prison. The review is also looking at Kirkham, North Sea Camp and Standford Hill. All three establishments are currently open prisons for adult males. The work of the review team will not conclude until the spring and no decisions in respect of the open estate are expected before then.

The provision of mother and baby units is being considered in plans for any new prison for women.

Prosecution (Facilitators)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Immigration and Nationality Directorate prepared for the prosecution of facilitators in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date. [107781]

Mrs. Roche: Since April 1999, the Immigration Service has prepared 180 cases against facilitators and passed them to the Crown Prosecution Service for consideration of prosecution. Information of this type was not recorded centrally prior to that date.

Nationality Decisions

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationality decisions have been taken since 31 March 1999. [107778]

Mrs. Roche: The number of decisions taken in nationality cases in the period April to December 1999 was 44,100.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed asylum seekers have been removed during the financial year 1999–2000 to date by (a) the Immigration Service Ports Directorate and (b) the Immigration Service Enforcement Directorate. [107779]

Mrs. Roche: The information available concerning the number of asylum seekers removed from the United Kingdom during the financial year commencing 1 April 1999 and up to 31 December 1999 is shown in the table.

	Port asylum removals[1, 2, 3]	Enforcement asylum removals[1, 2, 3]
1 April 1999 to 31 December 1999	3,760	1,990

[1] Including voluntary departures
[2] Excluding dependants
[3] Figures are provisional and rounded to 10

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current unit cost of supporting asylum seekers. [107772]

Mrs. Roche: It is not possible to provide a single answer to this question. Asylum seekers who claim asylum at their port of entry may be eligible for social security benefits. This will include housing benefit which will be set at broadly the average rent for the area concerned. Asylum seekers who do not make their application at their port of entry may, if they would otherwise be destitute, be supported by local authorities. Local authorities are able to reclaim grant from central Government subject to a maximum of £140 per week for single adults and £240 per week for families.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average cost to public funds of an asylum seeker resident (a) in a detention centre and (b) in the community. [107836]

Mrs. Roche: The unit cost of accommodating a single asylum seeker in a detention centre is currently £1,300 per week. It is not possible to give an average cost for accommodating an asylum seeker in the community. Currently, asylum seekers may be supported in one of two ways. Those who are port applicants are eligible for income support and housing benefit. Those who are in-country applicants may, if they would otherwise be destitute, be supported by local authorities. The Home Office will make grant available to enable local authorities to reclaim the costs of supporting asylum seekers. For this financial year reimbursement of £140 per week per single adult will be available.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the average cost to public funds of supporting an asylum seeker under the voucher scheme to be introduced on 1 April; and what is the current average cost of supporting an asylum seeker who is (a) in receipt of social security benefits and (b) in receipt of support under the interim scheme. [107835]

Mrs. Roche: The information is not available in the form requested. Single adult asylum seekers who are eligible for social security benefits currently receive income support set at 90 per cent. of the equivalent income support level. They are also eligible for housing benefit which is broadly set at the average rent for the area in question.

Asylum seekers who are being supported under the interim scheme are supported by local authorities. We do not yet have information from local authorities on the costs they are incurring in this financial year. But local authorities are able to reclaim grant from central government at the rate of £140 per week for single adults and £240 per week for families.

The National Asylum Support Service will be operating to similar unit cost targets.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate now of the number of additional staff which his Department will need to complement and administer the voucher support scheme and the accommodation scheme for asylum seekers, which are due to be introduced on 1 April. [107833]

Mrs. Roche: It is envisaged that the new National Asylum Support Service (which will be located within the Home Office), will have 512 full-time equivalent staff.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his current estimate of the start-up costs and the annual running costs of administering (a) the voucher support scheme and (b) the accommodation scheme due to be introduced on 1 April. [107834]

Mrs. Roche: As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Ms Southworth), of 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 452W, a contract has been awarded to Sodexho Pass International to administer the voucher scheme. The administrative costs associated with the running of this scheme are commercially confidential. No contracts have yet been awarded to accommodation providers.

Immigration

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish an updated version of the figures provided in the Annex to the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer" showing in respect of each indicator (a) the actual out-turn for 1998–99 and (b) the projected out-turn for 1999–00. [107780]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is in the table:

	Actual Out-turn 1998–99	Projected Out-turn 1999–2000
Immigration and Nationality Directorate Budget	£209m	[1]c.£800m
Passengers arriving	85m	89.1m
Asylum decisions	27,000	[2]c.38.000
After Entry Decisions	180,000	200,000
Removals of failed Asylum Seekers	7,070	8,400
Nationality Decisions	58,300	60,000
Cost of Immigration Appellate Authority	£14m	£16.7m
Appeals disposals	[3]39,700	[3]22,100
Cost of Entry Clearance Operation	£67.6m	[4]—
Visa/Entry Clearance Applications	1.5m (1998)	[4]—
Asylum Seekers Support	£470m	[5]—

[1] 1999–2000 budget includes estimated asylum support costs and costs of administration of support. Asylum support costs depend on numbers of new asylum claims and other variables.
[2] About 250 new asylum decision makers will complete training by March 2000 and will substantially increase the numbers of decisions made each week, but it is not possible to estimate output precisely.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many after-entry, non-asylum decisions have been taken since 31 March 1999. [107776]

Mrs. Roche: The number of after-entry non-asylum decisions, excluding those in respect of European Economic Area cases, taken in the period April to December 1999 was 174,000. This included cases dealt with by the Public Caller Unit which did not involve a decision such as return of passports, and the transfer of conditions from old to a new passport.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 31 March 1999 non-EEA passengers have had to wait for more than 30 minutes at Immigration control. [107768]

Mrs. Roche: Between 1 April 1999 and 31 December 1999, there were 2,148 occasions when non-European Economic Area passengers had to wait for more than 30 minutes at the Immigration control.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-asylum offenders have been removed since 31 March 1999. [107775]

Mrs. Roche: The number of non-asylum immigration offenders removed from the United Kingdom between 1 April 1999 and 31 December 1999 was 2,800. This figure is provisional.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the unit cost of after-entry asylum, nationality and enforcement casework in

(a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) currently; and if he will express these figures in both cash and real terms. [107765]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is in the table:

Unit cost of casework

	After entry	Asylum	Nationality	Enforcement (illegal entry)
(a) 1997–98
Cash	51.62	368.73	61.86	670.27
Real terms	54.24	387.40	65.00	704.20
(b) 1998–99
Cash	55.49	396.36	66.50	720.49
Real terms	56.88	406.27	68.16	738.51
(c) 1999–2000
Cash/real terms	53.70	383.58	64.36	697.26

The unit costs of the different types of case have been derived by applying weightings to the basic unit cost of weighted output. As such they are an approximation. The unit costs exclude some overheads and also any productivity-related payments that may be due to Siemens Business Services, Immigration and Nationality Directorate's Private Finance Initiative partner. Unit costs have been stated in cash terms and at 1999–2000 prices.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the unit cost of immigration port checks in both cash and real terms in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) currently. [107766]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 is set out in the table. Comparative figures are not available for 1997–98.

	Real terms	Cash terms
1998–99
Comparative baseline	5.68	5.68
1999–2000
Target (Home Office Business Plan)	5.43	5.55
Latest forecast	5.27	5.39

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of detailed non-asylum immigration examinations have culminated in refusal during the financial year 1997–2000; [107769]

(2) what percentage of non-asylum immigration referrals have culminated in refusals in the financial year 1999–2000 to date; [107770]

Mrs. Roche: The available information relates to the percentage of detailed examinations in non-asylum cases carried out at ports which resulted in the passenger being refused leave to enter. This was 63 per cent. over the period April to December 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of appealed immigration and asylum decisions have been upheld by the appeal authorities during the financial year 1999–2000 to date. [107771]

Mrs. Roche: The available information is given in the table.

Enforcement Removal Costs

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his target for the unit cost of an enforcement removal; and what is the current actual unit cost. [107773]

Mrs. Roche: A target for the unit cost of an enforcement removal has not yet been established. However, work is continuing to enable actual costs to be ascertained.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many projects has the Immigration and Nationality Directorate initiated against organised crime during 1999–2000 to date; and what proportion of all such projects commenced by the Directorate are now being completed within 12 months. [107782]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration Service is currently conducting 27 projects against organised crime, six of which have been initiated since April 1999. It is anticipated that 40 per cent. of all such projects will reach conclusion within 12 months.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of marriage abuse, unscrupulous representatives or illegal employment the Immigration and Nationality Directorate has prepared for prosecution so far during 1999–2000. [107774]

Mrs. Roche: Since April 1999, the Immigration Service has prepared 229 cases for possible prosecution and passed them to the Crown Prosecution Service for consideration. Of the total, 180 cases were prepared against facilitators and 49 involved other forms of abuse of the immigration law. Information is not held centrally that would enable us to break down these figures further.

Airline Liaison Officers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many airline liaison officers are now in post. [107767]

Mrs. Roche: On 31 January, a total of 18 airline liaison officers were in post. By March we anticipate that the network will have expanded to a total of 20 posts.

Enforcement Operations

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many major and medium enforcement operations the Immigration and Nationality Directorate has initiated so far during the year 1999–2000. [107764]

Mrs. Roche: Since April 1999, 17 upper tier and 55 middle tier operations have been carried out by the Immigration Service. (Major and medium enforcement operations are now referred to as upper and middle tier operations).

Citizenship (Waiting Times)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average waiting time for a decision on an application for British citizenship. [107777]

Mrs. Roche: The average waiting time for applications decided in December 1999 was 19 months.

Driving Licences

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance his Department offers to applicants for driving licences whose identification documents are (a) held by or (b) have not been issued by Immigration and Nationality Department ; and if he will make a statement. [106681]

Mrs. Roche: Where a request is made for the return of an applicant's identity documents for identification purposes, including applying for a driving licence, arrangements are made to return the documents as soon as possible, usually within five working days.

Asylum seekers who have no formal immigration status here and require their identity documents, for example, for obtaining a driving licence from the Driving and Vehicle Licensing Authority (DVLA), have hitherto been asked to send them back within 48 hours. However, as the DVLA are unable to process their applications within this timescale, this requirement has now been relaxed.

Where asylum seekers have no identity documents they are issued with a Standard Acknowledgement Letter (SAL) which confirms that an asylum application has been made and bears the holder's photograph. However, this document is only an acknowledgement that they have an outstanding asylum claim. We understand that the DVLA do not accept this document as a proof of identity but we are not able to issue any form of identity documents unless and until the asylum application has been favourably determined.

Mike Tyson

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account he took of the impact on BSkyB in making his decision on whether to allow Mr. Mike Tyson into the UK. [106652]

Mr. Straw: In reaching my decision to admit Mr. Tyson one of the factors which weighed most heavily with me was the lack of consistency in the application of this Immigration Rule, as well as the likely effect of cancellation of the fight on those who had already purchased tickets and smaller enterprises and individuals who were probably least able to beat any losses. The situation of the latter had been drawn to my attention in the representations submitted by Mr. Frank Warren, the promoter of the event, who also referred to the investment in the promotion by television networks including "Showtime" in the United States of America and "BSkyB" in this country. Although I considered these factors I did not regard them as relevant to the decision I took.

TREASURY

Rural Banking Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the impact on rural communities of the change in the number of rural branches of banks in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [107250]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The recent Treasury Policy Action Team (PAT 14) report on "Access to Financial Services" found that the relationship between bank branch closures and financial exclusion is far from straightforward. The general theme of the report is that tackling financial exclusion requires the development of new products and new ways to access them. Different techniques may suit different circumstances. These may help financially excluded people across the whole community, not just in deprived neighbourhoods.

Cancer Statistics

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) number and (b) percentage of the population suffered the most prevalent forms of cancer in (i) 1970 and (ii) 1998, indicating the proportion of each group who were likely to make a recovery in each of those years. [107487]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Maclean, dated 31 January 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number and percentage of the population suffering from prevalent forms of cancer.

The number and rate of new cases of cancer registered in 1971 and 1996 are given in the table for the major forms of cancer (those with more than 1,000 cases). These years are the earliest and latest dates for which national data are available for cases diagnosed in England and Wales. Figures are not available on patients recovering. However, figures are available on five-year relative survival. The table provides data for patients diagnosed in 1971–75 and 1986–90 in England and Wales.

New cases of cancer, major sites by sex, 1971 and 1996 (provisional estimates) and five-year relative survival for patients diagnosed in 1971–75 and 1986–90, England and Wales

Employment Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claimant-count unemployed people left the UK workforce in order to secure work in other countries during the most recent year for which figures are available. [107231]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 31 January 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number of claimant-count unemployed people who left the UK workforce in order to secure work in other countries.

The information requested is not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent figures for the total number of people in employment and self-employment, as a proportion of the working age population, in (a) England, (b) Northern Ireland, (c) Scotland and (d) Wales. [107227]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 31 January 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on proportions of working age people in employment.

The latest available estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), the main source of labour market data on individuals, for September to November 1999 are: England 75.0 per cent., Wales 69.4 per cent., Scotland 71.8 per cent. These estimates are seasonally adjusted. The available estimate for Northern Ireland is 67.0 per cent. (not seasonally adjusted). These estimates appear in the Labour Market Statistics First Release issued on 19 January.

Employment rates express the total in employment as a percentage of all of working age, in each country. Working age is defined as men aged 16–64 and women aged 16–59.

People aged 16 or over are classed as in employment by the LFS if they have done at least one hour of paid work (as an employee or self-employed) in the week prior to their LFS interview or if they have a job from which they are temporarily away. People who do unpaid work in a family business and people on Government-supported training and employment programmes are also included according to the International Labour Organisation convention.

Unemployment Statistics (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each year since 1979 to date, the number of (a) long-term unemployed, (b) young unemployed and (c) total unemployed in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if he will make a statement. [107258]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 31 January 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number of unemployed in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

The ONS publishes a monthly count of claimants of unemployment-related benefits. The claimant count consists of all people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits at Employment Service local offices. They must declare that they are out of work, capable of, available for and actively seeking work during the week in which the claim is made.

The information requested can be obtained from the Nomis database at the House of Commons Library.

Information on the claimant count by parliamentary constituency is available monthly from June 1983. Information on the claimant count by age and duration for computerised claims only is available monthly from June 1985. Both are on the unadjusted basis only.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on drug prevention measures of the proposed reduction of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise cover in the South West; and if he will make a statement. [107544]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs are carrying out a review to ensure that we are making the best use of our resources to target the highest priorities and risks. This work has not yet been completed and no decisions have been made.

VAT

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which disability products and services are exempt from VAT. [107515]

Dawn Primarolo: There is a specific VAT exemption for welfare services and associated goods supplied other than for profit to disabled people by charities and public bodies.

In addition there is a wide range of VAT zero-rates for goods and services supplied to disabled people. VAT Notice 701/7 "VAT reliefs for people with disabilities" contains details and is available from the Library.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106225]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There was one instance of unauthorised external use of a mail gateway in October 1999, but there have been no recorded instances of illegal access to Treasury computer systems at any other time.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106221]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There has been one instance of unauthorised external use of an email gateway (in October 1999), but there are no further recorded instances of fraudulent use of Treasury systems in any of the last five years.

There have been some cases of thefts of computer equipment as follows:

Year	Amount
1995	3
1996	6
1997	9
1998	1
1999	4

Barnett Formula

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to alter the operation of the Barnett Formula to recognise the increased needs for public expenditure in Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland. [107068]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government's policy is set out in the White Paper, "A Voice for Wales", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

VAT (House Repairs and Refurbishment)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the level of a uniform rate of VAT on development on previously underdeveloped sites and on house repair and refurbishment which would generate the same level of VAT income as the present VAT regime. [107278]

Dawn Primarolo: Based on existing pattern of activity in new build, repairs and refurbishment, a uniform 10 per cent. VAT rate on development of previously undeveloped sites and on house repair and refurbishment would generate approximately the same level of VAT income as the present VAT regime.

Alcohol and Tobacco

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the current (a) extent and (b) loss to the Exchequer as a result of (i) tobacco smuggling and (ii) alcohol smuggling. [107496]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Mrs. Lawrence) on 26 November 1999, Official Report, columns 254–55W.

Liquid Petroleum Gas

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the fuel price escalator on those households whose principal fuel is liquid petroleum gas. [107355]

Mr. Timms: No such assessment is needed. Liquid petroleum gas used for domestic purposes is not subject to any excise duty.

Salary Payments (28-day Month)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what data he has collated on the number of individuals who are paid on a 28 day month basis; and what assessment he has made of their income tax liability in those years when they receive 14 payments? [R] [107532]

(2) what representations he has received from taxpayers who may receive 14 monthly pay packets in a particular year. [R] [107501]

Dawn Primarolo: The interval at which employees are paid is a matter for businesses to decide. No one pays more tax on their earnings than is due in law as a result of having an extra pay day in a year.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of death certificates issued in Wales in each of the past 10 years that mentioned (a) heroin, (b) methadone, (c) ecstasy, (d) paracetamol and (e) alcohol. [106189]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 31 January 2000

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question asking what was the total number of death certificates issued in Wales in each of the past 10 years that mentioned (a) heroin, (b) methadone, (c) ecstasy, (d) paracetamol and (e) alcohol.

Information is available for usual residents of Wales, rather than for deaths occurring in Wales.

The information requested in parts (a) to (d) of the question can only be supplied from 1993 onwards when text from the death certificate was first stored electronically. This enables named drugs to be identified. The ONS has constructed a database of deaths where the underlying cause of death was drug-related. Table [1] shows the numbers of deaths on this database where the substances named in (a) to (d) were mentioned on the death certificate. Some deaths may be counted more than once, for example if heroin and methadone are both recorded on the death certificate.

It is not possible to identify all deaths with a mention of alcohol from the ONS drug-related database. The ONS does, however, have a standard list of underlying causes of death regarded as being attributable to alcohol and alcohol-related illness. Figures for these deaths are presented in Table [2].

Table [1]: Drug-related deaths[1] for usual residents of Wales, 1993–97

Year	Heroin and Diamorphine	Heroin and Morphine[2]	MDMA/Ecstasy	Paracetamol[3]	Methadone
1993	2	4	0	15	5
1994	2	7	2	19	9
1995	1	14	0	39	19
1996	5	13	2	21	19
1997	5	12	1	32	21

[2] Combined figures are presented for heroin and morphine as the latter may be detected at post-mortem following the breakdown of heroin in the body.
[3] Includes deaths where paracetamol or any compounds containing paracetamol, such as co-proxamol, are mentioned on the death certificate.

Endowment Policies Mis-selling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the mis-selling of endowment policies; what remedies are available to holders of endowment policies which do not realise sufficient capital on maturity to meet the mortgage repayment commitment; and if he will make a statement. [107128]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The advice and selling of endowment policies is fully regulated by the Financial Services Authority (FSA). On 21 December, FSA announced the conclusions of recent work on endowments. FSA concluded that on average holders of mortgage endowments have enjoyed returns which mean they have fared at least as well as they would have done with a repayment mortgage, and that there were no grounds for an industry-wide review of all past business. However, targeted visits to product provider and independent financial adviser firms show current selling practices to be poor. As part of its normal regulatory activities, the FSA will make follow-up visits to check for marked improvements in sales practices by the end of 2000. The FSA will not hesitate to take disciplinary action where appropriate if standards remain poor.

For investment business, including the sale of endowment policies, a redress mechanism has been established under the Financial Services Act 1986. Advisers and sellers of financial products, including endowment policies, are obliged to follow rules established under the Act which are designed to protect the financial interests of investors. The rules focus on giving best advice and assessing the suitability of proposed products to the investor's circumstances. An endowment policy holder with a loss resulting from non-compliance with these rules can complain to the firm involved. If the firm cannot settle the complaint, the Personal Investment Authority Ombudsman has the power to require firms to pay compensation in appropriate cases.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC School Visits

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines are given to the police on the carrying of weapons on visits to school premises. [105456]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 17 January 2000]: Police officers agree with the school whether or not officers visit in civilian dress or police uniform. During this visit, officers are advised not to overtly wear firearms.

Post Offices

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals are being considered by his Department to help sustain and develop the viability of rural and urban sub-post offices. [105856]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 18 January 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, West and Hessle (Mr. Johnson) on Thursday 20 January 2000, Official Report, columns 519–20W.

Parades Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of the Parades Commission in each year since its establishment and in the current year to the latest available date; and under which principal headings expenditure has been incurred. [106106]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 20 January 2000]: The total cost of the Parades Commission in the financial year 1997–98 was £613,000, and in 1998–99, the Commission's first full year, the total cost was £1.066 million, (in response to a question from Mr. Ross in September 1999 the total for 1998–99 was given as £1.064 million. This figure was incorrect and was due to rounding of figures presented in a different manner in the Annual Report.) The expenditure to December 1999, the last date available, was £697,000. The expenditure was broken down in the following categories: Pay; General Administrative Expenditure; Inter-Departmental Charges; Programme Expenditure; and Capital Expenditure.

Pay	124,000	208,000	185,000
GAE	57,000	62,000	39,000
IDCs	—	34,000	35,000
Program	410,000	760,000	432,000
Capital	22,000	2,000	6,000
Total	613,000	1,066,000	697,000

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106215]

Mr. Ingram: There have been no recorded incidents of fraud in the Department. On two occasions a theft of a laptop was reported.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106231]

Mr. Ingram: There have been no known incidents of illegal accesses by computer hackers of NIO systems within or from outside the Department.

TransTec

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the Government grants or loans received by TransTec plc or its subsidiaries for use in Northern Ireland since 1991. [107633]

Mr. Mandelson: Responsibility for this matter has been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland Police Authority

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions on which vehicles which were being used officially by executive or non-executive members of the Northern Ireland Police Authority were involved in road collisions or otherwise damaged in the past three years; and in each case if he will give (a) the circumstances in which the damage occurred, (b) who was determined to be legally responsible and (c) who paid for the damage. [103568]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 20 December 1999]: Executive members of the Police Authority involved in a road traffic accident are required to report any damage to police fleet vehicles in accordance with internal standing orders. The Authority has no knowledge of any damage to police fleet vehicles being recorded in the past three years.

The Police Authority has no knowledge of any member of the Authority driving or being required to drive a police vehicle, officially or otherwise during the past three years.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which executive and non-executive members of the Northern Ireland Police Authority have held authorised fuel charge cards at any time in the past three years; and, in each case, how much has been charged to each card. [103567]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 20 December 1999]: Over the last three years a total of six fuel charge cards have been used within the Police Authority for Northern Ireland. These charge cards have not been issued to individual Executive or Non-Executive members of the Authority, but rather have been issued to two functional branches within the Authority's Transport Services Division.

During the period February 1997 to November 1999, 3,525 litres of fuel have been charged to the six fuel cards.

HEALTH

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of members of the NHS pension scheme had qualifying survivor partners on their death in each of the last five years, broken down by members who died in service, members who died during deferral, and pensioner members. [104269]

Mr. Denham: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to my hon. Friend.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 31 January 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the proportion of members of the NHS Pension Scheme who had qualifying survivor partners on their death as it falls within my area of responsibility.

The NHS Pension Scheme only pays survivor benefits to legal spouses or dependant children. Widower's benefits were only generally available from 6 April 1988.

Unfortunately the Agency's current systems do not allow me to provide the proportion of members who died in service, or during deferral, and had qualifying partners on their death.

The information in respect of pensioner members is as follows:

Year	Proportion of pensioner members with qualifying survivor partners on their death (%)
1995	30
1996	30
1997	29
1999	27

The Government Actuary's last report, covering the period from 1989–1994, assumed an average 50% of pensioner members would have qualifying partner survivors.

The difference between the actuarial assumption and the experience over the last 5 years is due to the high proportion of women represented in the number of pensioner deaths whose husbands pre-deceased them or were not entitled to widower's pensions.

Neurology Treatment

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to recruit more neurologists and neurology specialist nurses; and if he will make a statement. [104580]

Mr. Denham: At local level, it is for National Health Service trusts and health authorities, who are accountable for the quality of the services they provide, to determine how their services are configured and delivered, in the light of local circumstances, in order to provide quality services to patients. This includes deciding on the number and grades of posts in neurology in their locality.

Extra money has been made available to enable the NHS to take on up to 7,000 doctors and 15,000 more nurses by March 2002. The precise increases between specialties in the Hospital and Community Health Services and the General Medical Services will depend on the recruitment choices of NHS trusts and health authorities locally.

From the Department of Health Medical and Dental Workforce on 30 September 1998, there were around 300 consultants in neurology. Currently, there are sufficient higher specialist trainees in the speciality for there to be around 100 extra qualifying for consultant posts by 2006.

Health Authority Mergers

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for health authority mergers. [105507]

Mr. Denham: There has been only one health authority merger since May 1997 when North West Anglia, East Norfolk and Cambridge and Huntingdon Health Authorities merged to become Norfolk and Cambridge Health Authorities on 1 April 1999.

There are no current plans for further health authority mergers, and any future proposals will be subject to full local consultation and will be based on the needs of the NHS and its patients. We will need to have clear evidence that any plans will deliver real health, service and clinical benefits.

Thalassaemia

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to raise awareness amongst health professionals of sickle cell and thalassaemia; and what training health professionals receive on this subject. [106196]

Mr. Denham: The Department is considering a proposal from the Haemoglobinopathy Societies to launch a campaign to raise awareness of sickle cell and thalassaemia, principally among black and minority ethnic groups.

Responsibility for the content and standards of medical education is shared between the regulatory bodies (e.g. The General Medical Council and Specialist Training Authority), professional bodies (notably the medical Royal Colleges) and universities. It is neither practicable nor desirable for the Government to prescribe the exact training that any individual doctor will receive.

All general practitioners currently receive appropriate training to help them meet the needs of their patients. A modernised system will be introduced early next year which will ensure that all new trainee general practitioners receive an educational needs assessment. This will enable a range of appropriate training to be better tailored and targeted.

The National Boards for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting approve courses enabling registration with the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (UKCC). As part of the training programme the UKCC ensures that participants recognise common factors that adversely affect the physical, mental and social well-being of patients and take appropriate action. The English National Board approves a post-registration study programme, "The Care and Management of Adults and Children with Sickle Cell, Thalassaemia and Related Disorders (Haemoglobinopathies)" for nurses.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were treated in the NHS for sickle cell and thalassaemia in each of the last 10 years. [106199]

Mr. Denham: The table shows the number of finished consultant episodes in National Health Service hospitals in England for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98, where the main diagnosis was Thalassaemia or Sickle Cell Disorders.

	Sickle cell disorders	Thalassaemia	Total
1989–90	3,695	3,831	7,527
1990–91	4,010	4,018	8,028
1991–92	5,408	5,244	10,652
1992–93	6,344	6,508	12,853
1993–94	7,256	6,732	13,988
1994–95	7,349	6,944	14,293
1995–96	8,671	7,475	16,146
1996–97	9,221	7,680	16,902
1997–98	9,270	7,761	17,031
Total	61,224	56,193	117,420

These figures are for in-patient activity only. They include the regular transfusion treatment of thalassaemic patients, which takes place on a day case basis. They do not reflect the number of patients receiving treatment from general practitioners or as hospital outpatients as statistics on such activity are not collected.

Information Technology Projects

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the information technology projects that are being undertaken by his Department and agencies responsible to his Department, stating in each case (a) the start date, (b) the originally planned completion date, (c) the expected completion date, (d) the originally planned cost and (e) the estimated actual cost; and if he will make a statement. [106746]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is shown in the table.

There are many smaller projects where the total project costs are less than £100,000. A full list of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Direct

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in expanding NHS Direct nationwide and its extension to the Wirral. [106809]

Ms Stuart: The White paper "The New NHS; Modern, and Dependable" announced the Government's commitment to NHS Direct. At present, NHS Direct covers 65 per cent. of the population. By the end of October this year, the whole of England, including the Wirral, will be covered.

Wansbeck Hospital

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of beds in the Wansbeck General Hospital; and what projections he has made of future bed numbers. [107155]

Mr. Denham: The Northumbria Healthcare National Health Service Trust has indicated that there are currently 308 beds at Wansbeck General Hospital. The trust is pursuing a private finance initiative solution to rationalise all beds at the Wansbeck General Hospital and Ashington Hospital on the Wansbeck site.

Dual X-ray Absorptiometry

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which health authorities and primary care groups are purchasing bone density measurements by means of dual X-ray absorptiometry for particular clinical indications, as advised in NHS EL (96) 110; [107440]

(2) what assessment he has made of the efficiency and availability of current provision of dual X-ray absorptiometry; [107441]

(3) what assessment he has made of the average number of operating hours dual X-ray absorptiometry equipment is in use per week by providers; and what assessment he has made of the hours that they are in use for (a) research and (b) NHS purposes; [107442]

(4) what assessment he has made of the availability of full diagnostic osteoporosis services in each health authority in England. [107443]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 January 2000]: Information on the number of health authorities and primary care groups purchasing bone density measurements by means of dual X-ray absorptiometry (DXA) for particular clinical indications is not held centrally.

No central assessment has been made of the number of operating hours for DXA equipment per week or the hours they are used for research and National Health Service purposes. Neither has there been any assessment of the efficiency and availability of DXA provision or the availability of full diagnostic osteoporosis services in each health authority.

However the Department asked the National Osteoporosis Society to conduct a survey of all units with access to DXA equipment. The results of which were published in an article in the Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine Vol.93 January 2000, copies of which are available in the Library.

The launch of the Osteoporosis Strategy in June 1998 at the Sixth Bath Conference has provided evidence-based clinical guidelines for the treatment and prevention of osteoporosis. These should provide the basis for health authorities wishing to develop local strategies. It is however for local health authorities to decide what services to provide taking into account resources available and the needs of the local population.

Pay Rises

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS staff will benefit from the 26 per cent. pay rise awarded to scientific staff. [107667]

Mr. Denham: There are an estimated 750 trainee Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers who will benefit from the 26 per cent. pay offer for 1999–2000.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the powered wheel chairs voucher scheme and the level of take-up in each year of its operation since 1996; [107516]

(2) if he will make it his policy to extend the ring fencing of funding for the powered chairs voucher scheme for a further year; [107514]

(3) when he will announce his conclusions in respect of the report by the York Health Economics Unit, Evaluation of the Voucher and Outdoor Wheelchair Scheme. [107517]

Mr. Hutton: The York Health Economics Consortium prepared an evaluation study of the implementation and operation of the National Health Service powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair scheme and the wheelchair voucher scheme. When I have completed my consideration of the recommendations contained in their report I shall announce my conclusions about the future of the two schemes.

1,158 powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs were issued in 1996–97, 4,581 in 1997–98 and 4,033 in 1998–99. Data for the wheelchair voucher scheme are only held from 1997–98. 660 vouchers were issued in 1997–98 and 5,010 were issued in 1998–99.

Mersey Region Health Trusts

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health trusts in the Mersey Region were in deficit in the last financial year. [107453]

Mr. Denham: No National Health Service trusts in the Merseyside and Cheshire area were in deficit in the last financial year, 1998–99.

NHS Drugs Procurement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to secure better value in NHS drugs procurement. [106190]

Ms Stuart: Branded medicines supplied to the National Health Service throughout the United Kingdom are covered by the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (PPRS). The PPRS includes a 4.5 per cent. reduction in the price of branded medicines from October 1999. Thereafter, the only changes permitted until 1 January 2001 are cost-neutral modulations, with strict controls on price increases after that date. The Health Act 1999 includes reserve powers to deal with companies which elect not to be scheme members or cease to be scheme members. Regulations have just been laid to ensure that the prices of medicines supplied by companies outside the voluntary scheme may be controlled, and the price reduction implemented where appropriate. At the same time the PPRS contains incentives to companies to develop new medicines, and allowances for the cost of research and development.

Generic medicines are not covered by the PPRS. We have commissioned a fundamental review of arrangements for the supply of generic medicines to the NHS in England to examine whether existing arrangements best serve the health service and to identify possible alternatives. The conclusions of the programme of work are expected in the summer.

The NHS Supplies Authority plays a part in the procurement of medicines for hospitals. The NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency will be set up from 1 April to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of purchasing in the NHS in England.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that the NHS drugs bill will not be increased as a result of the merger of Glaxo Wellcome and SmithKline Beecham. [106188]

Ms Stuart: The Director General of Fair Trading will consult interested parties about the proposed merger and will advise the Department of Trade in due course. His advice will take account of any comments from this Department on issues such as any effect of the proposed merger on price and availability of medicines and competition among health service suppliers.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS expenditure in each of the past 10 years was on drugs. [106191]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is provided in the table.

Total NHS drugs bill as a percentage of total NHS expenditure

Year	Percentage
1989–90	11.1

The 1998–99 data are provisional, but unlikely to change to any significant extent.

NHS Staff

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) nurses and (b) doctors were employed by the National Health Service (i) in May 1997 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available. [107856]

Mr. Denham: Information about numbers of nurses and doctors employed by the National Health Service is collected as at 30 September each year. Latest figures are as at 30 September 1998. The information is shown in the tables.

NHS hospital and community health services: nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff. England as at 30 September

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Honorary Consuls

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the former honorary consuls who have served since 1990 who were British citizens, giving (a) the posts in which they served, (b) the length of time they served and (c) the honours that have been awarded to them for such service. [105894]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 20 January 2000]: Information distinguishing length of time served and whether individuals are current or former Honorary British Consuls could be provided only at disproportionate cost. British nationals who have served since at least 1990 who have received honours, and with details of their awards, are as follows:

Kenya

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he plans to take to protect British citizens in Kenya from attacks by the Mungiki. [107493]

Mr. Hain: Our High Commission in Nairobi have been monitoring closely the activities of the Mungiki sect, but to date have no evidence of any direct threat to British citizens in Kenya. They will pass any such evidence on to the Kenyan security authorities, and our consular travel advice would be amended accordingly.

Pakistan

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of the number of Christians murdered in Pakistan under the Government of Nawaz Sharif. [107526]

Mr. Hain: We regularly raised our concerns about the position of Christians in Pakistan during the administration of Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif. There are no accurate and comprehensive statistics available about the number of Christians murdered in Pakistan during this period.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to General Musharraf about the treatment of Christians in Pakistan under the Sharia Law. [107521]

Mr. Hain: We have carefully noted General Musharraf's promise to Pakistan's minorities that their rights would be respected and that they would be treated as equal citizens. We have urged the Pakistani authorities to respect human rights, notably when I met Sharifuddin Pirzada, a civilian member of Pakistan's National Security Council on 8 December, and when our High Commissioner in Islamabad saw General Musharraf on 15 October and 15 November 1999.

Christians (Persecution)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries from which he has received reports that Christians have been (a) murdered, (b) persecuted and (c) discriminated against because of their religious beliefs. [107506]

Mr. Hain: We receive information from a wide range of sources on human rights abuses worldwide including instances of religious persecution, discrimination and violence. Over the past year we have received reports of abuse of freedom of belief in the following countries:

Pakistan, India, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Egypt, China, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Nepal and the Russian Federation.

We urge all states to implement laws and practices which foster tolerance and mutual respect and to protect religious minorities against discrimination and intimidation.

Indonesia

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of the number of Christians murdered in the Eastern Islands of Indonesia in the last three months; and what related representations he has made to the Indonesian Government. [107505]

Mr. Battle: The situation is highly volatile and there are no reliable casualty figures. The Indonesian media have reported that over 1,000 Christians and Muslims have been killed in Maluku since the new year. These tragic deaths highlight the importance of the new Indonesian Government's efforts to secure peace and reconciliation in Maluku in partnership with the United Nations Development Programme—a process we fully support.

We intend to raise our concerns about Maluku with President Wahid during his visit to London on 1–2 February.

Humanitarian Crises

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UK proposals for international action in response to humanitarian crises which he is discussing with international partners. [108095]

Mr. Robin Cook: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made it clear in his speech at the Mansion House on 22 November that the international community needs an agreed framework on when and how it is appropriate to intervene in the face of massive violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. The United Nations Charter declares that armed force should not be used, save in the common interest. We need to build consensus on what that common interest is and how we define it.

We believe that the development of a set of pragmatic understandings on action in response to humanitarian crises would help the Security Council—acting on behalf of the Members of the United Nations—to reach consensus when such crises occur, thus ensuring effective and timely action by the international community. In this context, we have put to the UN Secretary-General and to key international partners a set of ideas, of which the key elements are:

first, any intervention is by definition a failure of prevention. Force should always be the last resort.

second, the immediate responsibility for halting violence rests with the state in which it occurs;

but, third, when faced with an immediate and overwhelming humanitarian catastrophe and a government that has demonstrated itself unwilling or unable to prevent it, the international community should take action; and finally, any use of force in this context must be collective, proportionate, likely to achieve its objective, and carried out in accordance with international law.

The detail of these preliminary ideas is still under discussion with partners. Once we have had time to take account of their views and develop our proposals further, we will place a copy in the Library of the House.

EU Council Business

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for February, together with the major European Union events for the next six months. [108096]

Mr. Vaz: The information requested is in the Library.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106217]

Mr. Battle: In the past five years, there has been: (a) one case of fraud involving improper use of the internet, (b) thirteen cases of theft.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106228]

Mr. Battle: In the last five years, there has been no evidence of FCO staff accessing systems to which they are not authorised. Over this period there has been only one known unauthorised entry from outside the department. This occurred in 1995 when an unknown hacker gained access to an unclassified internal system.

Illegal Drugs Trade

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total amount spent in the course of reducing the illegal drugs trade in

(a) South America, (b) Eastern Europe and (c) Africa and Asia in each of the past 10 years; and what assessment he has made of the effect of this expenditure in reducing the trade in drugs. [106185]

Mr. Battle: A breakdown of spending on specific regions is available only for the last three years, as follows:

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
South America	0.29	0.74	0.9
Eastern Europe	0.65	0.67	0.82
Africa and Asia	1.74	1.65	1.96

The increased focus brought to our international counter-drugs activities by this Government's 10-year drugs strategy has resulted in targeting of assistance on the countries posing the greatest drugs threat to the UK. Recent UK assistance to Iran is helping that country to make the world's biggest seizures of opiates (180 tonnes in 1998), much of which would otherwise reach the UK and the rest of Europe. The close co-ordination of our international counter-drugs work helped HMS Marlborough and HMS Northumberland to seize more than 11 tonnes of cocaine in 1999, worth well over £1 billion at UK street prices.

Documents

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) for what reasons documents FCO 9/1053 and FCO 42/342 have been retained by his Department; and when he expects them to be available to the public; [107449]

(2) what is the subject matter of the Public Record Office files on (a) FCO 42/146, (b) FCO 42 342 and (c) FCO 9/1053; and if he will make a statement; [107785]

(3) for what reasons document FCO 42/146 deposited in the Public Record Office is to remain closed to public inspection until 2009. [107448]

Mr. Battle: The subject matter of these three files is UK policy concerning Gibraltar in 1967–69. The respective file titles, which are given in shelf-lists available at the Public Record Office and on their web-site, are: possible UN mediation on Gibraltar; possible investigation by the Crowther Commission into the Constitution; and Gibraltar dispute.

An application to close FCO 42/146 and FCO 9/1053 for 10 years after their due release date of 1 January 1999 has been made to the Lord Chancellor in accordance with Section 5(1) of the Public Records Act of 1967. This is because release of these documents would harm the United Kingdom's international relations. The application to close the files in our view meets the criteria for extended closure of public records set out in Chapter 9.10–14 of the White Paper on Open Government (Cm. 2290). In accordance with the requirements of the White Paper, these files will be re-reviewed for release in 10 years time.

FCO 42/342 has recently been cleared for release to the Public Record Office and will be available there shortly.

Arms Exhibitions

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's process is for checking that arms companies exhibiting and trading at British arms fairs are complying with the UK Landmine Act 1998 and the Ottawa Convention. [104297]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on 24 November 1999, Official Report, column 116W. While there is no specific check for compliance with the Landmines Act 1998, all companies exhibiting and trading at UK defence exhibitions are subject to UK law: this includes the Landmines Act 1998, which brings into effect the provisions of the Ottawa Convention.

Where the MOD supports an exhibition, UK contractors are scrutinised for compliance against the Handbook of Industrial Security. Overseas contractors are not bound by the Handbook, but are subject to spot checks by MOD staff. In addition, HM Customs & Excise make targeted checks at import to enforce the prohibition on the importation of anti-personnel mines and components.

Bahrain

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of 6 ML1 SIELS and 1 ML1 OIEL exported to Bahrain this year. [99505]

Mr. Hain [pursuant to my reply, 24 November 1999, c.149W]: An administrative error led to a mistake in my earlier answer to the hon. Member of 24 November 1999. The correct answer is as follows:

All export licence applications for Bahrain for ML1 equipment this year have been for private/recreational use by the ruling family, for national defence by the Bahrain Defence Force, who are not involved in internal security, or for the training unit of the Bahrain National Guard.

All export licences for Bahrain are considered against the established criteria, including whether there is a clearly identifiable risk of the equipment being used for external aggression or internal repression, in which case it will be refused.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy (Employment Law)

35. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough representing the Church Commissioners, when he expects the Commissioners to review employment law as this relates to the appointment of clergy; and if he will make a statement. [105973]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Archbishops' Council is responsible for matters relating to the employment status of clergy. The Council is considering the implications of the Employment Relations Act 1999 for the clergy and is awaiting the publication of the DTI's consultation document promised in the early months of this year.

Clergy (Remuneration)

36. Mr. Bercow: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the change in the remuneration of the clergy since 1 May 1997. [105974]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Between 1 April 1997 and 1 April 1999, the national average stipend for incumbents increased by nearly 9 per cent. from £14,510 to £15,810.

Evangelisation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what contribution the Church Commissioners are making to the planning of Christian evangelisation for the remainder of the year 2000 and for 2001. [105968]

Mr. Stuart Bell: I am sure that hon. Member will agree with me that the hard-working priests of the Church of England are in the front line of evangelisation.

The primary focus of the Church Commissioners is their support for the ongoing parochial ministry and mission, and to this end we shall be providing upwards of £120 million this year towards clergy stipends and pensions so that all parishes might play their part in sharing the Christian message with those in their communities.

Land (Carlisle)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the future of the land in the Wigton road and Dalston road area of Carlisle owned by the Church Commissioners. [105972]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners have submitted an outline planning application to Carlisle City Council relating to approximately 50 hectares of land at Morton. The application is in respect of housing, employment, public open space and landscaping.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Staff Bonuses (New Year Period)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Council how much her Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the New Year period, indicating the maximum and minimum bonuses paid, and the number of people to whom the maximum and minimum payments were made; and if she will make a statement. [105429]

Mrs. Beckett: Two members of staff in my Department received special bonuses amounting to £300 in total. Both were Private Office staff. On-call allowances were paid to three members of staff, and these totalled £256.56.

CABINET OFFICE

Foreign Service Allowance

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if it is her policy to continue to provide a foreign service allowance to Crown servants abroad; what is the reason for this allowance; what is the annual cost of the allowance; and if she will make a statement. [106462]

Mr. Stringer: Responsibility for allowances paid to Home Civil Servants serving overseas was delegated to Departments and agencies on 1 April 1996. Information on the annual cost of such allowances, which reimburse and compensate staff for the essential extra cost of having to live outside the UK in order to perform their duties, is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Government-owned Properties

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many Government-owned properties are currently unoccupied in the Reading, East constituency. [106459]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John C. Locke to Jane Griffiths, dated 31 January 2000:

The Minister of State for the Cabinet Office has asked me to reply to your question about the number of Government owned properties currently unoccupied in the Reading East constituency.

Under the terms of the Civil Estate Coordination Agreement, individual Government Departments are responsible for notifying PACE of their surplus accommodation. PACE's records indicate that there are currently no unoccupied Government properties in the Reading East constituency.

The four unoccupied properties mentioned in my previous letter of 31 October 1997 have now been disposed of by the Agency.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, and (b) theft her Department has recorded in the last five years. [106220]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Within my Department, its Agencies, the Central Office of Information and No. 10 Downing Street, over the last five years there have been two cases of fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, and 50 cases of theft as follows:

Year	Fraud	Theft
1996–97	1	10
1997–98	0	11
1998–99	0	7
1999–2000[1]	1	13
Total	2	50

[1] To date

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in her Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside her Department. [106224]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Within my Department, its Agencies, the Central Office of Information and No. 10 Downing Street, no illegal attempts to access computer systems have been detected over the past five years, either from within or outside.

Regulation

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what regulation impact assessments were carried out by Government Departments between the coming into force of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 and 1 May 1997. [107004]

Mr. Stringer: Between the coming into force of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act in 1994 and 1 May 1997 Government Departments were required to complete Compliance Cost Assessments which were chiefly concerned with costs to business.

The Government's Better Regulation review of the regulatory system demonstrated the need for a more succinct and open system for assessing the full impact of regulatory proposals. Accordingly, since August 1998 Government Departments have been required to complete Regulatory Impact Assessments with the emphasis on identifying and publishing the risks, costs and benefits of proposed regulations; who is affected; and any non-regulatory alternatives.

Details of Compliance Cost Assessments from the November 1993 to November 1998 are contained in the twice yearly Command Papers called: The Command Paper of Compliance Cost Assessments. Since November 1998 the Command papers have included Regulatory Impact Assessments and are now called: The Command Paper of Regulatory Impact Assessments.

Regulatory Panel

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the Regulatory Panel last met; and if she will make a statement on the nature of their discussions and the decisions taken. [107007]

Mr. Stringer: The Panel for Regulatory Accountability met for the first time on 15 December 1999 to discuss its role and future work programme. The members of the Panel agreed to:

Take a strategic overview of the Government's regulatory plans;

Ensure any necessary improvements in the regulatory system and to the performance of individual departments; and Take account of the particular impacts of regulation on small businesses.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the terms of reference for the Regulatory Panel. [107006]

Mr. Stringer: The Panel for Regulatory Accountability has been established at the heart of Government with the remit to modernise the regulatory system, simplify existing regulation and ease regulatory pressures on business and the public sector.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to introduce the new child support measures contained in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill; and if he will make a statement. [108106]

Mr. Darling: The reform of the child support scheme is a major programme of work involving new legislation, new computer systems and significant changes to the way the Child Support Agency operates. We have always made it clear that we would not repeat the mistakes of the previous Government by introducing the reforms too quickly or before robust and reliable computer systems were in place and staff were properly trained. We therefore propose to introduce the new child support scheme for new cases by April 2002, by which time successful introduction can be achieved without unacceptable risks.

As we have always made clear, existing cases will be transferred onto the new scheme once we are sure that the new arrangements are working well. Attempting to move existing cases across too quickly would, again, present unacceptable operational risks.

The Child Support Agency is already making improvements to the service within the constraints of the current scheme and we are determined that it will continue to do so between now and 2002.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions he has made to allow hardship payments of Jobseeker's Allowance to be paid to a third party. [108107]

Angela Eagle: The provision that enables all or part of a person's benefit to be paid to a third party, where it is in the interests of the claimant or a member of his family to do so, has been a long standing feature of the Social Security system.

An anomaly in the Jobseekers Act 1995 prevented this provision from applying to hardship payments of Jobseeker's Allowance. This restriction has now been removed by Part V of Schedule 8 to the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999, which came into force on 11 November 1999.

Maternity Grants

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many mothers he estimates will benefit from the sure start maternity grant in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in the first year of its operation; and if he will make a statement. [107256]

Angela Eagle: The Sure Start Maternity Grant Scheme, which will replace maternity payments, commences on 27 March for parents who are expecting a baby on or after 11 June 2000. It is a grant of up to £200 per child which may be payable to claimants (or their partners) of Income Support, Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) and Disabled Persons Tax Credit (DPTC).

We are unable to provide an estimate in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA district office. The district boundaries do not correspond to constituency boundaries. The Shires district comprises offices at Shrewsbury, Telford, Hereford, Worcester and Kidderminster.

In the last complete year for which figures are available, April 1998 to March 1999, 2,495 maternity payments were awarded in the Shires district. We predict that there will be 2,535 payments in 1999–2000. This leads us to believe that there may be 2,688 payments in 2000–001, the first year of the new scheme.

Benefit Reduction

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children living with parents with care will under the new formula in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill be entitled to reduced support; and what the average loss for each child will be. [106571]

Angela Eagle: Overall, more than 1 million children will be better off as our reforms take effect. If all existing cases moved to the new scheme today, we estimate that, where the non-resident parent is in work, around 350,000 parents with care, with around 500,000 children, would have a lower assessment. The average reduction for parents with care would be around £17 a week in total, which equates to around £11 per child.

However, because of the introduction of a maintenance premium in Income Support and the 100 per cent. disregard of maintenance in Working Families Tax Credit, around 85 per cent. of children will be better off at the point they first come to the CSA than they would have been under the old arrangements. In the remaining cases, although assessments may be lower under the new scheme, we will get more of what is due actually paid—compliance is expected to increase to 80 per cent. or more, compared with 66 per cent. now—so the difference in cash terms will not be so marked. Also, changes in liability for existing cases will be phased in.

Notes:

1. New scheme maintenance modelled on August 1998 5 per cent. scan of Child Support Computer System.

2. Caseloads calibrated to forecast 'A' day levels, and rounded to the nearest 10,000. The average change in maintenance entitlement is rounded to the nearest 50 pence.

Correspondence

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will reply to the letter dated 20 September 1999 from the hon. and learned Member for Harborough on behalf of Mr. Edward Hynes of Market Harborough to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for City of York (Mr. Bayley). [106306]

Mr. Bayley: A reply was sent on Friday 27 January 2000.

Minimum Pension Guarantee

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 169W, on the minimum pension guarantee, if he will place a copy of his letter to the hon. Member in the Library. [107759]

Mr. Rooker: I have placed a copy of my letter to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) in the Library.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106227]

Angela Eagle: There have been no recorded cases of Departmental computer systems being illegally accessed by internal or external hackers.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106218]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Automated Credit Transfer

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the cost to the Benefits Agency of making payments to claimants via automated credit transfer; and if he will state how that figure is calculated; [107452]

(2) he will publish arrangements to set up bank accounts for benefit payment recipients who do not have bank or building society accounts; [107450]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of welfare benefit recipients who will receive payments via automated credit transfer by the end of (a) 2003, (b) 2004 and (c) 2005. [107451]

Mr. Rooker: The overall average unit cost to the Benefits Agency of making a payment to a claimant via automated credit transfer (ACT) is in the order of 1p.

It is not appropriate to give a full breakdown of how this figure is calculated as part of the costs are commercially confidential between the Benefits Agency and its suppliers.

The vast majority of benefit customers already have bank accounts. We will be making arrangements for the people and payments where ACT is not the right answer. This may include supporting people as they access the increasing number of simple banking products being introduced. As these arrangements will not be required until after 2003 we are still researching our customers' needs and studying current market trends.

In 2003, the transition from current paper-based methods of payment will begin, and by the end of 2005 the majority of benefit recipients will receive payments via automated credit transfer. Detailed migration plans are not yet in place. We are still researching our customers' needs and will ensure that the migration is managed carefully and in a way that will not put at risk the efficient distribution of benefit payments.

Around one third of benefit recipients already choose to have their benefits paid by automated credit transfer, direct into their bank accounts, and the vast majority, around 85 per cent, already have access to a bank account. However, there will be some limited exceptions. We have given an assurance that those benefit recipients, whether paid by automated credit transfer or otherwise, who wish to collect their benefits in cash at post offices will continue to be able to do so.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department has taken to encourage local authorities to prevent fraud from entering the benefit system. [107669]

Mr. Rooker: We are committed to taking tough action to combat Housing Benefit fraud. We have made an additional £100 million available to enable all LAs to implement the Verification Framework by 2001. The Framework forms a platform for the secure and accurate administration by defining the evidence which should be gathered to support a claim, and for the frequency of subsequent checks. As of 28 January 2000, 226 LAs have received funding to implement the Framework.

We have reformed the anti-fraud financial incentive scheme for local authorities to ensure they can be rewarded for detecting and prosecuting cases of fraud. We want all LAs to implement the Verification Framework so we have built additional incentives into the scheme to encourage them to do so. Every LA that adopts the Framework can qualify for extra subsidy payments.

We have invited all local authorities to participate in the Royal Mail "do not redirect" initiative which prevents benefit claimants from using Royal Mail's postal redirection arrangements to make false claims to benefit from multiple addresses. Already, well over 200 local authorities are operating this scheme and many more are preparing to implement it.

We have made £4 million available to install computer terminals in local authorities which provide access to the Department's benefit systems. We are now looking to extend this initiative to include exchanging information electronically between local authorities and the Department, providing further scope to prevent fraud and error occurring in the first place. The electronic transfer of data is being successfully piloted with 20 LAs and we plan to roll this service out nationally from February 2000.

We have announced on 24 January that we are setting up a National Benefits Intelligence Unit to help crack down on benefit fraud. The unit will draw on the expertise of fraud investigators in the Department, as well as intelligence from local authorities and other agencies.

Finally, we have arranged a programme of visits by the Benefits Fraud Inspectorate to the top 30 spending councils to drive-up standards of benefit administration and counter fraud performance. This programme of visits is due to be completed by September 2000.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for each quarter since BASIS was formed how many fraud cases compiled by BASIS's National Intelligence Unit (a) were forwarded to the police investigation and (b) resulted in a prosecution; [107444]

(2) what were the responsibilities and achievements of BASIS's Business Development Team for each of the last five years. [107445]

Mr. Rooker: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 28 January 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking for each quarter since BASIS was formed how many fraud cases compiled by BASIS's National Intelligence Unit (a) were forwarded to the police investigation and (b) resulted in a prosecution, and what were the responsibilities and achievements of BASIS's Business Development Team for each of the last five years.

The Benefit Agency Security Investigation Service (BASIS) exists to counter the threat of organised and serious fraudulent attacks on the benefit system. The team's priority is to prevent and deter fraud. It is part of the Security Branch whose role is to promote the development and provision of secure and accurate services in the Benefits Agency.

The National Intelligence Unit (NIU) provides intelligence for BASIS in the Security Branch and links with other risk management teams. It does not refer investigations to the Police because all intelligence and information is referred to either BASIS Operational Teams or relevant BA sections.

The NIU exists to support the Benefits Agency through; gathering and analysing information; referring the gathered intelligence to the appropriate BASIS investigation team, via the Analyst Unit; it also acts as a multi agency link to other Government Departments.

BASIS does not refer cases of benefit fraud to the police for investigation. If during an investigation the need to involve the police arises the team will contact them and appraise them of the situation. At this point a joint operation may be conducted. BASIS officers would concentrate on benefit fraud whilst the police may look at other linked criminal activity.

There are no figures kept for prosecutions resulting from joint operations. However, in 1998–1999 BASIS prosecuted 666 cases of benefit fraud with a 96% successful conviction rate.

The BASIS Business Development Team (BDT) was established in March 1999 with the appointment of a Business Development Manager. The BDT is a small team which exists to support BASIS in improving its business processes and to support the team in meeting the objectives of the Agency and Department.

The most notable achievements of the BDT in the eleven months of its existence are improvements in processes such as expenditure and performance accountability, internal security assurance, communication, management checks, industrial relations, training & development, planning and reporting. Work on BASIS terms and conditions and a review of the Guidance Manual has improved clarity around individual entitlement. The current recruitment drive has brought in 50 new staff to date. The IT strategy for this year is on course to upgrade our capability throughout the Section and other equipment is being standardised and renewed. Moreover, the work of the BDT has allowed the Operational and BASIS National Intelligence Unit managers to apply a greater focus on the core business of investigation, detection, deterrence and prevention of organised and serious fraud against the benefits system.

I hope this is helpful.

Benefit Overpayments

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the recent overpayment of benefit into recipients' bank and building society accounts; [107543]

(2) what estimate he has made of the extra costs incurred in recovering the overpayment of benefits paid direct into beneficiaries' accounts; and if he will make a statement. [107542]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefit payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 28 January 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent questions asking if he will make a statement on the reasons for the recent overpayment of benefit into recipients' bank and building society accounts, and also, what estimate he has made of the extra costs which will be incurred in recovering the benefit overpaid.

The problem was caused by an incomplete file being erroneously passed to the Bankers Automated Credit Service for payment on 17 January, compounded by the correct file being reprocessed for payment on 18 January.

On 17 January 112,000 customers correctly received a payment into their bank accounts, while 60,000 customers did not receive the payment which was due. The following day, the same 112,000 customers received a duplicate payment into their accounts, while the 60,000 customers received their payment a day late. The value of the duplicate payments amount to £10.5 million.

Customers were notified of the problem by letter on 24 January and given details of how to repay the duplicate payment. Dedicated phone lines were set up to receive phone calls from those customers who needed to talk to somebody about how to pay the money back. Customers can also contact their local benefit offices for advice.

No estimate is yet available as to the extra costs incurred in recovering the overpaid benefit.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much benefit was overpaid due to a processing error notified to recipients in a letter from the Benefits Agency Central Recovery Group Manager dated 23 January; and if he will make a statement; [107533]

(2) what steps he will take to recover overpaid benefit due to a processing error notified to recipients in January from those people who are unable to pay it back immediately; and if he will make a statement; [107535]

(3) how many people were contacted about benefit overpayments by the Central Recovery Group Manager of the Benefits Agency in letters to recipients in January. [107534]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefit payments is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 28 January 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent questions asking if he will make a statement about how much benefit was overpaid due to a processing error notified to recipients in a letter from the Benefits Agency Central Recovery Group Manager dated 23rd January, how many people received letters and what steps he will take to recover overpaid benefit due to the error from those people who are unable to pay it back immediately.

A computer processing problem resulted in a batch of Income Support payments paid by Automated Credit Transfer being duplicated. 112,000 Income Support customers received duplicate payments amounting to £10.5m. The payments were made into customers' bank accounts on 18 January. The duplicate payments made represent a very small proportion of the total number of Income Support payments the Agency makes each year.

Customers were notified of the problem by letter on 24 January and given details of how to repay the duplicate payment. Letters were issued to 109,663 customers. Letters were not issued where we had been informed the customer had since died or where the amount paid was less than £5..

The Secretary of State has a duty to seek recovery under common law where an overpayment has arisen outside of the provisions of Sections 71 and 74 of the Administration Act 1992. Recovery under common law has been a feature of the social security system since its inception.

The BAs Central Recovery Group has set up dedicated phone lines to receive phone calls from customers who needed to speak to somebody about how to pay the money back. Customers can also contact their local benefit offices for advice and guidance.

I hope this is helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what change there has been in the time between arrest and sentencing since May 1997 for young offenders in (a) West Mercia and (b) Shrewsbury Police Division; and if he will make a statement. [107168]

Jane Kennedy: Information on the time between arrest and sentencing in 1997 is available for persistent young offenders only, not all young offenders.

The average time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offender cases initiated in West Mercia Police Area was 155 days in 1997, and an estimated 88 days in January to June 1999—the most recent figure from the same source. This amounts to a reduction of 67 days. Figures for May 1997 alone and Shrewsbury Police Division are not separately available.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106237]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested in (a) is set out in the table. There have been no recorded instances of hackers attempting to gain access to our computer systems from outside the Department.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106210]

Jane Kennedy: There has been one attempted incident of computer fraud recorded. The information requested in (b) is set out in the following table.

Maintenance Orders

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his policy is in respect of the enforcement of maintenance orders against former partners residing overseas, with particular reference to the case of Mrs. J. Basu of Formby (ref. 98603). [107026]

Jane Kennedy: The UK is a party to seven international Conventions and Agreements, which have established reciprocal arrangements with a number of foreign authorities. These are designed to assist a person entitled to receive payments under a maintenance order in one country to obtain payment from a former partner residing in another. The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for transmitting and receiving papers between the UK courts and the overseas authorities. It would be inappropriate to comment on individual cases.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

13. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to seek an amendment of the law to simplify the application process for lottery grants. [105949]

Mr. Chris Smith: None. My officials are, however, working with distributors to find ways of simplifying the Lottery application process to ensure that it is user-friendly and that forms are written in plain language. We already have in place the popular Awards for All scheme, which is a straightforward way for community groups to apply for grants of £500 to £5,000. One simple application form covers charities, arts, sport and heritage groups. The Quality, Efficiency and Standards Team which I established is currently looking at how the costs of making a Lottery application can be obtained.

22. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contribution the lottery is making towards encouraging the playing of competitive sporting fixtures in schools. [105958]

Kate Hoey: We have asked Sport England to ensure that arranging inter-school competitive fixtures is a key part of the job description of the Active School Sports Co-ordinators. Active Schools Sports Co-ordinators is a new Sport England initiative which is being supported by the Lottery Sports Fund with additional support expected to come from partnership funding, including NOF. Detailed proposals for the initiative are being drawn up in conjunction with key partners.

Millennium Dome

15. Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the public response to opinion surveys of people leaving the millennium dome. [105951]

Janet Anderson: In marked contrast to the opinions of some media commentators, polls of people visiting the Dome show that the majority of them have extremely encouraging positive reactions and views. Polls of Dome visitors by The Sunday Times, The Mirror, ITN and The Independent in the first week of opening all showed high approval ratings. Results ranged from 91 per cent. in the ITN poll on 7 January saying the Dome was worth the trip, to 85 per cent. in The Sunday Times poll of 9 January saying they enjoyed the Dome and 74 per cent. in the same poll saying they would recommend it to friends. On 13 January the London Evening Standard poll, conducted by ICM, reported that 8 out of 10 visitors said that they were satisfied or very satisfied with the Dome. Other findings reported were that seven out of 10 visitors would recommend their friends to come; half are keen to return for a second visit; that children are especially enthusiastic; and most said their day was better than expected.

Recognising the inevitable bedding-in and teething problems being experienced by this unique visitor attraction over its first few weeks of operation, these high level outcomes from polls undertaken by third parties give every indication that the Millennium Experience at the Dome will, over its 12 months of operation, be a great success. The New Millennium Experience Company itself is conducting a visitor opinion poll through MORI covering the first month of operation and will have the results by mid February.

Arts Subsidies

17. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what were the total public subsidies paid to (a) opera, (b) live theatre and (c) poetry in the last financial year. [105953]

Mr. Alan Howarth: During the last financial year, opera received around £35 million in grant-in-aid from the Arts Council of England, live theatre £27 million and literature £1.5 million, of which poetry received nearly 70 per cent. (or £1 million).

Public Service Broadcasting

18. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the role of public service broadcasting. [105954]

Mr. Chris Smith: Public service broadcasting must remain at the heart of our broadcasting system. Despite the increase in choice which digital television brings, we will continue to need public service broadcasters to sustain a diversity of viewpoints and to act as a quality benchmark.

National Athletics Stadium

19. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the designation of a new national athletics stadium. [105955]

Mr. Chris Smith: No decision has yet been taken about the location of a national athletics stadium. We are currently looking carefully at the options for staging major athletics events, including the 2005 World Athletics Championships and Olympic Games.

NESTA

21. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made with the establishment of the national endowment for science, technology and the arts; and if he will make a statement. [105957]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts (NESTA) is now fully established and is in a position to begin using the income generated by its £200 million endowment, over £10 million per year, to support innovative ideas and creative individuals. Its Invention and Innovation Programme, which will help turn creative ideas and inventions into reality, opened for applications on 14 December 1999, and the first awards will be made in March. NESTA's other programmes, involving fellowships for exceptionally talented individuals and support for ground-breaking educational schemes, will also come on stream this spring.

Budding inventors and innovators can get in touch with NESTA via its website—www.nesta.org.uk

Film Industry

23. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to increase inward investment in the UK film industry. [105959]

Janet Anderson: The Government introduced tax breaks in 1997, and a new definition of "British film" last year, which make it more financially attractive for foreign film makers to film in Britain. Government Departments are also working in close co-operation with the British Film Commission to attract foreign film makers to the UK. This has enabled us to set up the British Film Office in Los Angeles. In November I launched a DVD, produced by the Government and British film industry, which provides film makers with an introduction to the first class film making facilities in the UK. We have also set up the Film Council to deliver a coherent strategy for the development of a sustainable UK film industry, and we shall continue to be strongly supportive of its work to increase inward investment.

Sport (Television Rights)

24. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage professional sports bodies to invest income from the sale of television rights in local sports facilities. [105960]

Mr. Chris Smith: Many governing bodies have signed the Central Council for Physical Recreation's Voluntary Code, under which a minimum of 5 per cent. of broadcasting income is invested in grass roots development. The football authorities have recently re-affirmed their commitments to allocating 5 per cent. of future broadcasting revenues in that way. The Government are in detailed discussion with them about how best to ensure that these funds are used to improve the development of grass roots football in England.

Millennium Events

25. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of how events across the country to mark the new millennium were received. [105961]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission today published a report about the new year celebrations including the major events that took place in 22 cities across the United Kingdom and the Beacon Millennium project. It concludes that overall the celebrations were very well received and extremely successful. Given that many of the cities involved do not have a tradition of large scale public new year events, this is a tremendous achievement. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, the Government have received very positive feedback on the major religious events that took place during the first weekend of 2000: the four Millennium Church Services in London, Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast and the Shared Act of Reflection and Commitment by the faith communities of the UK.

The new year celebrations were just the start of a year long Millennium Festival to mark the new Millennium, funded by the National Lottery. People will be celebrating at many thousand events, both large and small, right across the UK in what is probably the biggest planned programme of celebrations the country has seen.

Dome Sponsors

26. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many dome sponsors have yet to finalise their contractual arrangements. [105962]

Janet Anderson: Boots The Chemist, Mars Confectionary and BskyB: all three sponsors remain committed at Board level and we are confident that contractual arrangements will be finalised in the very near future.

Sponsored Bodies (Funding)

28. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his Department's objectives are in negotiating three-year funding agreements with sponsored bodies. [105964]

Mr. Chris Smith: Funding agreements place a clear responsibility on bodies which receive public money to deliver against demanding output targets, and demonstrate how public money is used in pursuit of Government objectives.

Tourism

29. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the balance of payments relating to earnings from tourism. [105965]

Janet Anderson: The Office for National Statistics has estimated, using data from the International Passenger Survey and other sources, that the direct contribution to the UK balance of payments arising from tourism is as shown in the table:

£ million

	1996	1997	1998
Exports: earnings from overseas visitors to UK	13,770	13,805	14,366
Imports: expenditure by UK residents going abroad	16,729	17,443	20,194
Balance of trade in services	−2,959	−3,638	−5,828

Source:
The UK Trade in Services (Balance of Payments)—Office for National Statistics 1996, 1997 and 1998

This is not a full account of the balance of payments effects of tourism; such an account would need to include, for example, overseas trade in tourism goods and the international investment flows of tourism companies.

In 1998, UK tourism recorded a deficit—£5,828 million on its balance of payments. For the third quarter of 1999 there was a continued deficit of £2,019 million in the balance of payments for tourism.

The upward trend in tourism by both overseas residents to the UK and by UK residents abroad continued in 1998. Exchange rate movements have had significant effects on both overseas and UK residents' travel.

Volunteering

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department has taken to promote volunteering. [105950]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department supports a wide range of cultural and leisure activities which not only provide opportunities for volunteering, but benefit greatly from such participation. Volunteers contribute to the achievement of our key objectives, in particular the promotion of access to cultural and leisure activities for all. My Department already does much to recognise, promote and support volunteering and we are currently reviewing our efforts in this area to identify how we can build on this.

Films (Children)

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what future steps he is taking to encourage the British film industry to make more films for children. [105952]

Janet Anderson: I have asked the Chairman of the Film Council to consider the recommendation of the Film Education Working Group that production of films for children should be one of the priorities of the Council's Lottery strategy. The availability of a wider range of films for children could lead to both educational and commercial benefits.

TV Licences

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will amend regulations concerning the need for television licences in houses of multiple occupation, to ensure that in those owned by universities for the use of students each student who has a television receiver is not required to purchase a separate licence. [107232]

Janet Anderson: The Government have no plans to amend the television licensing regulations so as to exempt students in accommodation owned by universities from the normal licensing requirements applicable to people living in accommodation in multiple occupation. To do so would discriminate against students living in other types of accommodation, while extending the concession to all students would inevitably prompt demands for similar concessions for other people living in comparable accommodation.

Seaside Resorts

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to encourage the regeneration of British seaside resorts; and if he will make a statement. [105966]

Janet Anderson: Regeneration of our seaside resorts is one of 15 key action points in the Government's tourism strategy document "Tomorrow's Tourism". We have made good progress in many areas that will impact beneficially on resorts, including accommodation schemes and the number of resorts included in the new Objective 2 European funding map.

In line with its funding agreement with my Department, the English Tourism Council is driving action on resorts and has set up a Resorts Task Force, drawing upon expertise from both public and private sectors. The Task Force first met last Wednesday and will develop a programme of action to assist resorts with their regeneration strategies.

Nautical Archaeology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to increase his Department's support for nautical archaeology. [106035]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Following the Comprehensive Spending Review in 1998, my Department has allocated programme expenditure of £255,000 per annum on underwater archaeology for the three years 1999–2000 to 2001–02. Allocations for the subsequent two years will be reviewed as part of the Government's current spending review.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106230]

Mr. Chris Smith: No DCMS computer system has been illegally accessed in the last five years.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips, and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106214]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department has not recorded any cases of computer fraud over the last five years. There has been one incident of computer theft where a PC system unit was stolen from the Department. The police were informed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on farm incomes. [108103]

Mr. Nick Brown: Estimated figures show that total income from farming remains broadly unchanged in 1999 compared with 1998. The continued difficulties in the farming industry are as a result of lower prices for most agricultural commodities due to the oversupply of commodity markets. The strength of sterling, which affects all sections of the economy, has also been a factor. Detailed estimates of the income, output and productivity of United Kingdom Agriculture in 1999 were published this morning and have been placed in the Library of the House.

Soya Products (Glyphosate)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish results on glyphosate residues in soya products. [108104]

Ms Quin: Interim results on glyphosate residues, taken from the Government's ongoing monitoring programme for pesticides, are being published today. A summary of the results from the first six months of a year-long survey of residues in soya products appears in MAFF's Food Safety Information Bulletin. The results show that none of the samples tested contained residues of glyphosate above the reporting level. Copies of the Food Safety Information Bulletin and a more detailed information paper have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Pig Sector

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to assist pig producers. [106859]

Ms Quin: Steps have already been taken. Formal and informal pig farming co-operatives were eligible to apply for a marketing grant under the Agriculture Development Scheme 1999. The scheme closed for applications on 30 November 1999 and successful applications will be announced shortly. My right hon. Friend the Minister has also announced his intention that pig producers will benefit significantly from an extra £5 million earmarked to help farmers improve their marketing, collaboration and competitiveness. Discussions with the industry are currently taking place on ways of making best use of the money.

The "verification officer" appointed by the Minister will continue his work with industry bodies to identify cases where product is being sold at retail or catering level which might mislead the consumer into believing it contains pork of British origin when in fact it is imported. He will also continue to check progress on the commitment given some time ago by major retailers that all their own label fresh pork and certain processed products such as bacon would come from stall and tether and Meat and Bone Meal free production systems.

At the request of the Minister, the interpretation of the Food Labelling Regulations 1996 as they affected origin marking are to be tightened up. New industry guidelines were put out for consultation and responses received. Those guidelines will be issued shortly.

We continue to try and persuade public authorities that buying to British welfare and other standards offers good value and meets the needs of their "customers". To back up this message, the Minister has written to local councils and health authorities in England to emphasise the importance of sourcing to British standards.

The Minister wrote to Commissioner Fischler on 20 October urging him to re-open the Aids to Private Storage scheme and re-instate the special refund on exports of fresh and frozen carcase meat and cuts to Russia. In addition, UK officials attending the monthly Pigmeat Management Committee meeting, chaired by the Commission, have called for similar action at each meeting since September 1999 (most recently, at the meeting on 18 January).

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the European Union Commissioner on state aids to the pig sector. [106858]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister has many discussions with Mr. Fischler on all manner of topics. The Minister wrote to Mr. Fischler on state aids on 20 December 1999 and both he and I discussed these with Mr. Fischler in the margins of the Agriculture Council on Monday 24 January.

Rodenticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what controls are in place to regulate the use of rodenticides; and if he will make a statement. [106655]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 January 2000]: All pesticides, including rodenticides, are subject to strict statutory control. Anyone wishing to gain an approval for a rodenticide is required to submit a substantial data package for rigorous assessment by the departments responsible for pesticides. Advice is also sought from the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides on any application for a new use of an approved rodenticide where significant new issues arise as well as on any new rodenticide compounds. Only if, on the basis of these assessments, Ministers are content that there are no unacceptable risks to people or the environment will the rodenticide be approved. All approved rodenticides and their uses are subject to review and, if appropriate, approvals can be restricted or revoked entirely.

Research and Development

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of expenditure by his Department on research and development in each of the last 10 years. [106990]

Ms Quin: The Department's total expenditure on research and development in each of the last 10 financial years was:

Year	£ million
1989–90	112.2
1990–91	119.1
1991–92	121.5
1992–93	132.9
1993–94	135.0
1994–95	137.2
1995–96	139.7
1996–97	137.4
1997–98	140.5
1998–99	139.4

Lindane

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the evidence assembled by other EU member states before their decisions to ban Lindane; [104528]

(2) if he will ban the (a) sale and (b) use of Lindane; [104651]

(3) what assessment he has made of the extent of bans on the use of Lindane in other countries; [104527]

(4) what steps his Department takes to monitor the effects of Lindane. [104609]

Ms Quin [holding answer 13 January 2000]: The Government act as necessary on pesticides in order to safeguard health. In the case of lindane, using a precautionary assessment, independent scientific advice is that currently approved uses (agricultural and non-agricultural) of lindane do not pose any unacceptable risk to people or the environment. In addition all UK pesticide approval holders are legally obliged to report any scientific information relating to the safety of their products and the Government's Pesticide Incident Appraisal Panel considers all investigated incidents where the use of agricultural pesticides may have affected a person's health.

Both the EU and UK have programmes to review pesticides and lindane is under consideration in both programmes. Last June the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, an independent body, considered evidence from both the UK and EU reviews of lindane. In the light of the Committee's recommendations the Government moved swiftly to ban those uses of lindane that gave rise to unacceptable levels of exposure with the remaining uses being allowed to continue subject to further controls to reduce exposure and, where appropriate, companies being required to submit further data including environmental data for non-agricultural uses.

We do not routinely monitor and investigate the decisions taken by the regulatory authorities of other countries primarily because our decisions are based on the evidence and advice presented to UK Ministers about uses in the UK. Technical specifications, product formulations and uses are liable to considerable variation across the world and particular decisions elsewhere may have no direct relevance in the UK. Consequently, in the case of lindane, we have not attempted to establish its historic use overseas or the reasons why other countries have introduced partial or complete bans. The EU has yet to reach conclusions on the future European status of lindane but we have reported the action we have taken to the Commission and encouraged them to reach a European view as soon as possible.

European Food Agency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposals put forward by the European Commission for a European Food Agency; what consultations have been held with Her Majesty's Government on the proposal; what overlap is likely with the work and responsibilities of the UK's Food Standards Agency; what Her Majesty's Government's response to the proposal has been; and when he expects proposals for legislation to be presented to the Council of Ministers. [105487]

Ms Quin [holding answer 18 January 2000]: The Commission's White Paper on food safety published on 12 January sets out detailed proposals aimed at restoring public confidence on food safety and includes proposals for setting up an independent European Food Authority by 2002. The Commission proposes that the role of the Authority be restricted to information gathering, risk assessment and analysis, provision of scientific advice and monitoring, but with no responsibility for proposing legislation. The Commission are inviting comments on these proposals by the end of April.

The Government welcome the proposal to set up a European Food Authority which they see as an opportunity to improve the EU food safety regime. The Government will give careful consideration to the proposals before submitting their formal and detailed response.

During development of the proposal officials have provided the Commission with advice based on our experience in setting up the Food Standards Agency.
The current proposals do not involve any Treaty change or significant alteration in the balance of EU and national responsibilities. We will be pressing for an EU Authority which complements the UK's Food Standards Agency.

Calf Exports

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on calf exports from the UK to other EU countries. [102216]

Ms Quin [holding answer 13 December 1999]: Exports of all live bovine animals from the UK remain prohibited under EU law.

Further relaxation of the ban to permit the export of live bovines is foreseen in the Florence agreement. However negotiations relating to the lifting of the ban in respect of boneless beef have been by no means easy. The Government will need to consider carefully when the time is right to seek to open negotiations on the next stages of the Florence agreement.

Pesticides

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the ban on spraying sulphuric acid on crops was removed in the UK. [103393]

Ms Quin: Sulphuric acid has been used as a pesticide, principally as a desiccant for potato crops, for over 50 years. The current pesticide approval for sulphuric acid was issued in November 1995.

As part of its programme of work the Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP) reviewed the use of sulphuric acid as an agricultural desiccant in October 1997. The ACP recommended that approval could continue subject to further investigation into the potential risks to bystanders and the aquatic environment being produced.

The Health and Safety Executive is addressing the issues associated with bystander exposure and will report its findings to the ACP. A research project, managed by the Scottish Agricultural College, is presently under way to study the effects of sulphuric acid on the buffering capacity of natural waters in isolated systems. This addresses changes in acidity in water courses adjacent to crops treated with sulphuric acid. The results are expected later this year and will also be referred to the ACP.

Farming Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the farming industry of the strength of the pound. [105027]

Ms Quin: The present depressed state of farm incomes results from various factors, including the strength of sterling, the collapse of world prices and the loss of some key export markets. It is difficult to single out one factor in isolation and assess its impact when the factors are to an extent interlinked.

From 1997 to 1999, approximately £227 million was paid in agrimonetary compensation to livestock producers. A further £170 million will be paid to arable farmers in 2000, and beef, sheep and arable farmers can expect agrimonetary compensation amounting to up to £88 million during 2000.

Family Businesses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent steps he has taken to support family businesses in (a) rural areas and (b) national parks. [106056]

Ms Quin: The £1.6 billion support for Rural Development, which my right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 7 December, represents a radical redirection of support for agriculture and a significant increase in expenditure on rural development measures. The shift of emphasis away from production subsidies and the decision to modulate CAP subsidy payments mean that the rural development measures will be of benefit to family businesses in both rural areas and national parks.

Agricultural Research

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outturn figure for Government spending on research and development relating to (a) organic farming, (b) agricultural genetic engineering and (c) agricultural biotechnology, at 1999 prices, in 1998–99. [107265]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 January 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for South Swindon (Ms Drown) on 13 May 1999, Official Report, column 211W, which provides the information in respect of 1998–99 R&D spend for each area, and for a number of preceding years.

Chlormequat

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in relation to the use of chlormequat on fruit trees. [103295]

Ms Quin: My Department has received a number of representations, particularly in relation to the use of chlormequat on pears. These have come from Members of the House, the public, growers and the food and agrochemical industries.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 1 February 2000

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will take measures to ensure that the composition of the staff of the proposed Policing Board, Northern Ireland Office Police Division and Office of Police Ombudsman are broadly reflective of the population of Northern Ireland as a whole; [107814]

(2) when he intends to report on the role of district policing partnerships in Belfast; and what representations he has received on this matter; [107806]

(3) pursuant to his oral statement of 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 845–48, when he will appoint the Oversight Commissioner; and if he will set out the person specification and job description for the Oversight Commissioner; [107810]

(4) who he plans will be responsible for the periodic review of progress towards a routinely unarmed police service in Northern Ireland recommended by the Patten report; how often these reviews will take place; and if their findings will be laid before the House; [107811]

(5) if he will outline the criteria by which the Policing Board will make a decision on the badge for the proposed Police Service for Northern Ireland; and if he will ensure that proposals be made public; [107809]

(6) what plans he has to develop a tenure policy for police officers; and if he will ensure that officers involved in security work are included in it. [107813]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State made a statement in the House on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 845–48, setting out the Government's response to the Patten Report. The Government are considering a number of detailed issues in relation to the Report and will make its decisions clear in due course.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that the proposed policing board will possess the power to call upon the chief constable to retire in the interests of efficiency and effectiveness, subject to the approval of the secretary of state. [107805]

Mr. Ingram: The Government accept the recommendations of the Patten report that the Policing Board should, with the Secretary of State's approval, be able to call upon the chief constable to retire in the interests of efficiency and effectiveness.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met members of the Northern Ireland Police Federation to discuss his plans to reform the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [107614]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met with members of the Northern Ireland Police Federation on Tuesday 11 January 2000 to discuss the Patten report.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will establish a public register of interests and associations for the police in Northern Ireland which will include currently serving officers. [107816]

Mr. Ingram: No. The Patten report does not recommend a public register.

Departmental Smoking Policy

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to reduce smoking in his Department. [105796]

Mr. Mandelson: NIO has a well established policy on smoking in the workplace which was first introduced in 1991 and a complete ban on smoking, apart from designated smoking rooms, has been in operation in all NIO premises since 1995. The policy has been supported through participation in the annual no-smoking day campaign and various health awareness events where professional and medical advice and information has been made available to encourage staff who smoke to give it up. The Department also intends to participate in the Quit Year 2000 initiative which has just been launched by the Ulster Cancer Foundation.

The Department is currently participating in a detailed Health Survey of all its staff which will identify the mental and physical health of our staff including basic data on smoking habits which will be used to plan future employee well-being activity.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many crimes were committed in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years in which legally-held (a) shotguns, (b) .22 rifles, (c) .22 handguns, (d) fullbore handguns and (e) fullbore rifles were used by (i) their legal owners and (ii) others. [106965]

Mr. Ingram: The Chief Constable has advised me that the information about the ownership of the firearms used in criminal activity is not readily available and obtaining it would incur disproportionate cost. The table, however, shows the number of offences involving the use of firearms, and the type of firearm used over the last 10 years.

Year	Handgun	Shotgun	Air weapon	Rifle	Machine gun	Other	Imitation/replica firearms
1989–90	772	90	17	142	28	231	58
1990–91	797	107	8	122	38	86	51
1991–92	861	105	8	169	28	60	44
1992–93	1,035	126	15	148	28	12	57

Year	Handgun	Shotgun	Air weapon	Rifle	Machine gun	Other	Imitation/replica firearms
1993–94	905	86	10	166	39	31	67
1994–95	570	80	14	73	41	34	53
1995–96	438	60	28	11	4	7	57
1996–97	475	92	39	23	6	9	50
1997–98	610	72	65	17	10	35	56
1998–99[1] (old rules)	506	87	69	23	2	23	45
1998–99[1] (new rules)	510	92	211	23	2	44	47

[1] On 1 April 1998 the Home Office introduced a new counting system under which crime is recorded. The new rules figures can not be directly compared to previous years.

Intelligence Activity

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans he had to draw up a code of practice on covert law enforcement techniques and other intelligence activity overseen by a complaints tribunal; [107804]

(2) what plans he has to appoint a covert policing commissioner to regulate the activities of Special Branch and other intelligence activity. [107807]

Mr. Ingram: The recommendations about covert law enforcement made by the Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland will be implemented by forthcoming legislation. The legislation will require the publication of Codes of Practice on covert law enforcement techniques which will apply on a UK-wide basis.

Union Flag

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the existing practice on the display of the Union Flag from (a) police premises and (b) other public buildings. [107817]

Mr. Ingram: Regarding the first part of my hon. Friend's question, I refer him to the answer I gave him earlier today on questions regarding this subject. On the second part, I will not be reviewing the flying of flags on public buildings in Northern Ireland under my authority. Other public buildings in Northern Ireland, following devolution on 2 December 1999, now fall within the responsibility of the devolved administration.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Specialist Schools

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the value of additional private sector money levered in for educational use through the specialist school regime since May 1997. [106994]

Ms Estelle Morris: The value of additional private sector money raised through the Specialist Schools programme since May 1997 is approximately £25,000,000.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools given specialist status since May 1997, and the parliamentary constituencies in which they are located. [106995]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is provided in the following table.

Schools given specialist status since May 1997

School	Parliamentary constituency
Arts Colleges
Bishopshalt School	Uxbridge
Blatchington Mill School and Sixth Form College	Hove
Brentwood Ursuline Convent School	Brentwood and Ongar
Bridgewater County High School	Warrington South
Bridgewater Hall School	North East Milton Keynes

Disability Rights Commission for Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultation took place between himself and the National Assembly for Wales on the appointment of the Disability Rights Commission for Wales. [107015]

Ms Hodge: My right hon. Friend the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales and his officials have been consulted at every stage of the recruitment process to appoint a Commissioner with special knowledge of Wales to the Disability Rights Commission.

Summer Camps

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement, including the cost, on his proposal that all 16-year-olds should attend summer camps. [107495]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 389W.

Science Teachers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many recruits for the teaching of (a) Physics, (b) Chemistry and (c) Biology in secondary schools were recruited into initial teacher training courses in each of the last five years. [107176]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are no national data available for secondary initial teacher training courses in Physics, Chemistry and Biology. Data are available for secondary initial teacher training Science courses. Recruitment to Science for England over the last five years is given in the table.

Year	Number
1995–96	2,794
1996–97	2,937
1997–98	2,789
1998–99	2,279
1999–2000	2,353

TTA Survey of ITT Providers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Physics teacher trainees he expects to be in his target figure for recruitment into initial teacher training courses for Science teaching in secondary schools in (a) 2000–01 (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03. [107180]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are no secondary initial teacher training targets for Physics. Physics is included in the secondary target for Science. The DfEE secondary initial teacher training target for Science in England for 2000–01 is 2,690. Indicative targets for 2001–02 and 2002–03 are also 2,690.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the impact on schools' budgets of the use by parents of mobile phone numbers as a point of contact for school staff. [107610]

Jacqui Smith: We have made no such estimate. It is for individual schools to determine, and agree with parents, the most cost-effective way of contacting parents in particular circumstances.

School Transport

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statutory requirement applies to the provision of transport for children to their nearest state school; and what obligation there is for local education authorities to fund such transport (a) from the nearest bus stop to the school and (b) from the child's home to the bus stop. [107568]

Jacqui Smith: Local Education Authorities must provide free transport for a pupil of compulsory school age who attends his or her nearest suitable school, if it is beyond statutory walking distance from the child's home. These distances are two miles for pupils aged under eight, and three miles for those aged eight and over. If these criteria are not met, a Local Education Authority must still decide whether free transport is necessary, taking account of a pupil's age, the possible routes he or she might take to school, and a parent's wish for denominational education where the parent adheres to the denomination of the school. Free transport may be provided from the child's home or from a bus stop convenient to the pupil's home.

Teachers' Review Body

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the report of the School Teachers' Review Body. [108105]

Mr. Blunkett: The 2000 report of the School Teachers' Review Body has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. This is an historic pay round, centred on modernising the pay system for the entire teaching profession. I am grateful to the Chair and members of the Review Body for their important work.

I asked the School Teachers' Review Body to ensure that, in making its recommendations, six key considerations were taken into account:

the strategy for modernising the teaching profession set out in the Green Paper "Teachers: meeting the challenge of change" (this strategy was similarly set out in the Green Paper "The BEST for Teaching and Learning in Wales); the need to minimise additional burden on head teachers and line managers, while ensuring effective implementation of the new arrangements to reward excellence in schools; specific items of non-pay expenditure for delivering a high quality education service should not be diverted to fund a pay settlement; firm three year plans for my Department's Expenditure Limit and for all local authorities set by the Comprehensive Spending Review, from which we must fund all service improvements and pay settlements, and similar constraints in Wales;

the Government's inflation target, which requires responsibility in all pay settlements; the need for schools to recruit, retain and motivate sufficient teachers, deputy headteachers and headteachers of the required quality.

I have considered the report carefully against these considerations and am satisfied that they are met. I have decided to accept the Review Body's main recommendations. They are in line with the Government's prudent and disciplined approach to public spending and its commitment to deliver high quality public services and low inflation.

My proposals, which include minor modifications of the STRB recommendations where indicated, are as follows:

General Pay Increase with effect from 1 April 2000 the values of the pay spines for qualified classroom teachers, Advanced Skills Teachers, heads and deputies, and the pay scale for unqualified teachers, should be increased by 3.3 per cent; also with effect from 1 April 2000, London allowances other than the inner London Supplement should be increased by 3.3 per cent.

Pay reform: classroom teachers

The existing pay spine will be replaced by a new pay spine and an upper pay range:

Pay spine

the pay spine will comprise nine full salary points (half points are to be abolished; teachers with a second class honours degree or better should be entitled to one point for qualifications, and the relevant body should have the discretion to award additional points on the pay spine for relevant experience outside teaching;

teachers should receive a point on the pay spine for each year of service subject to the discretion of the relevant body to discount unsatisfactory service on the same basis as applies under the existing pay system;

a teacher whose performance is exceptionally good in a particular year should, at the discretion of the relevant body, be awarded two points on the pay spine for that year of service; points awarded on the pay spine should become a permanent entitlement for the teacher concerned;

Upper pay range

the upper pay range will comprise five salary points;

teachers at the top of the pay spine who apply to cross the threshold to the new upper pay range and are assessed as meeting national performance standards being developed by the Government will be placed on the first point of that range, which will be £2,000 above point nine on the pay spine; further progression on the upper pay range will be at the discretion of the relevant body to recognise substantial and sustained performance and contribution to the school as a teacher. Points should not be awarded annually other than in exceptional circumstances, and normally at least two years should elapse between crossing the threshold and being awarded the next point above the threshold uplift. I propose that the first such points should be available in September 2002;

once awarded, the first point on the upper pay range will be a consolidated addition to pay and transferable if the teacher moves to another school (the STRB will consider the status of subsequent pay points in their next report);

Management allowances

the existing system of responsibility points will be replaced by a range of four management allowances; management allowances should be awarded at the discretion of the relevant body to teachers who undertake clearly defined and significant management tasks additional to their normal duties as classroom teachers. I will consult further on the way such management allowances should be defined in the light of information about the way responsibility points are used at present; management allowances may be awarded while a teacher is holding a particular post or on a short-term basis at the discretion of the relevant body;

Recruitment and retention allowances:

the existing system of recruitment and retention points will be replaced by a range of three recruitment and retention allowances;

the first or second allowance should be awarded at the discretion of the relevant body to teachers in schools generally; a third allowance could additionally be used in inner London, and in schools in special measures, to help ease particular recruitment and retention problems;

the STRB has recommended that as an alternative to using recruitment and retention allowances as a normal salary enhancement in areas covered by the DfEE's "Excellence in Cities" initiative, the relevant body should also have discretion to use an annual allowance wholly or in part in the form of a lump sum payment subject to satisfactory completion of service in the year concerned. Where lump sums are paid they will not be covered by the normal presumption that teachers' pay and allowances are consolidated and pensionable. I have accepted this recommendation with the modification that the recommended discretion should be available for use by all relevant bodies rather than just those in Excellence in Cities areas.

Special educational needs the existing system of special needs points will be replaced by two levels of allowance which should be awarded on the same basis as the existing points.

The reformed pay structure for qualified classroom teachers should be introduced on the following basis:

the new structure will be introduced with effect from 1 September 2000, from which date the existing system should cease to exist; appropriate assimilation arrangements will be drawn up in consultation with interested parties, based on the principle that no teacher should be worse off unless there has been a change in relevant circumstances;

discretionary points and the mandatory special needs point awarded under the existing system should normally be expected to be converted into an appropriate allowance under the new system, but half points and excellence points should be protected on an individual basis; and discretionary points and the mandatory special needs point awarded under the existing system should not be offset against the threshold uplift.

Advanced Skills Teachers

The separate pay spine for Advanced Skills Teachers should be retained and their possible inclusion in strategic school leadership arrangements should be at the discretion of the governing body.

Leadership Group

The relevant body, having determined the pay of the head, must determine the pay of other leadership group members with effect from 1 September 2000 on the following basis:

the relevant body must determine an appropriate five point individual salary range on the leadership pay spine for each member of the group other than the head; salary ranges must be positioned between the individual school range adopted for the head and the salary level of teachers immediately below the leadership group. Assimilation must ensure that no one is worse off as a result of the introduction of the new arrangements; and subsequent movement within the individual salary range must reflect performance as for heads under the arrangements introduced with effect from 1 September 1999.

The maxima for the range of points for each of the eight school groups for heads will be raised by two points, and the top of the pay spine extended accordingly, with effect from 1 September 2000.

To provide relevant bodies with additional flexibility for the initial setting of pay ranges for leadership group members, the existing rule which restricts the circumstances under which a head's individual school range can be reopened must be waived temporarily.

Acceptance of these recommendations is subject to two modifications: first, senior teachers and deputies joining the leadership group should normally assimilate to the nearest point above their existing salary, except where the relevant body judges a higher point is appropriate to ensure that the pay ranges at the school properly reflect the relative responsibilities of jobholders; and secondly, that at the point of assimilation deputies should be on a higher point on the leadership spine than senior teachers in the same school who are not deputies.

I propose to consult on the basis that leadership group members who are not heads should have the same professional duties as deputy heads, save that those who are senior teachers rather than deputies should not be required to undertake the professional duties of the head in the head's absence.

Special School Heads

With effect from 1 September 2000, the existing interim basis on which special schools are assigned to a school group for the purposes of determining the pay of the head will be replaced by a new formula which links job weight with pupil numbers and teaching and non-teaching staff numbers. Once the school is assigned to a group, the pay arrangements for the head should be the same as for the head of mainstream schools. The group for hospital schools will be determined on an individual basis, but the pay arrangements must otherwise be the same as for schools generally.

School Performance Award scheme

Governing bodies of schools in receipt of an award under the proposed School Performance Award scheme will be able to distribute some or all of it on the advice of the head in the form of non-consolidated, non-pensionable bonuses to staff.

Fast Track Teachers

The STRB has recommended that teachers on proposed fast-track programmes should have an additional spine point up to the proposed performance threshold, and that such teachers should not be subject to the working time limits that apply to classroom teachers generally. I propose to accept this STRB recommendation with the modification that the additional spine point should be available only to newly qualified teachers who join the fast-track. Other serving teachers below the threshold who join the fast track will benefit from double jumping of experience points so should receive an extra point anyway.

Existing Pay Allowances and Safeguarding

Out of school learning

The existing scope for relevant bodies to make discretionary payments to classroom teachers who participate in out-of-school activities will be maintained but heads, deputies, other leadership group teachers, Advanced Skills Teachers and fast-track teachers will not be eligible for such payments.

In-service training

The existing scope for relevant bodies to make discretionary payments to teachers and deputy heads who undertake in-service training will be maintained and cover leadership group teachers other than the head but not fast-track teachers.

Acting duties

The existing discretionary scope for relevant bodies to pay acting allowances to classroom teachers who are assigned and carry out the duties of a head or deputy, but who have not been appointed as acting heads or deputies, will be maintained and cover teachers who are assigned and carry out the duties of other leadership group members.

Social Priority Allowance and Inner London Supplement

The existing basis for safeguarding residual entitlements to the SPA and ILS will be maintained.

1993 pay restructuring

I will take account of residual entitlements arising from the 1993 restructuring of teachers' pay when consulting interested parties on the appropriate basis for assimilation to the proposed new pay structure from 1 September 2000.

General safeguarding

I will also consult interested parties about the continued basis for general safeguarding with reference back to the STRB as appropriate.

Financial implications

The full cost of the settlement in 2000–01 will arise from the 3.3 per cent. increase in teachers' pay spines and allowances from 1 April 2000, and from the reforms of the qualified teachers' pay system and other changes consequent on previous restructuring which will come into effect from 1 September 2000. The cost of the April increase in 2000–01 will be £420 million in England and Wales. This will be affordable within the resources available to local authorities. In England, Education Standard Spending will rise by £1,103 million (5.4 per cent.) in 2000–01 compared with 1999–2000. Local authorities in England will also benefit in 2000–01 from increased spending power of £90 million resulting from rescheduling of increased employers' contributions to teachers' pensions, and a general increase in Revenue Support Grant of £35 million. In addition to the allocation through the Revenue Support Grant, I have confirmed today that I have identified an additional £50 million from my Department's budget which will be available to schools in England, paid as a Special Grant to ensure that there are additional resources available to meet the challenging standards agenda and the new basic pay increase.

In Wales, following decisions by the National Assembly, local authorities will be able to increase spending on education by £75 million in 2000–01, compared with 1999–2000.

Additional specific funding will support the costs of the reform of the qualified teachers' pay system from September 2000. This will take the form of a new Special Grant in England and specific extra allocations to local authorities in Wales.

In the initial years of the new pay system, the Government will make additional funds available in England to support extra costs incurred by schools as follows:

a Special Grant, established under section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, which will fund fully the threshold salary uplift of £2,000 payable from September 2000 for every full-time-equivalent teacher moving to the upper pay range in the current year. There will be no quota on threshold successes. All eligible teachers who apply and are assessed as meeting the national standards will move to the upper pay range. This grant will operate until at least March 2002; a one-off payment of £2,000 from the same Special Grant for every full-time-equivalent classroom teacher appointed directly to the new leadership group in academic year 2000–01. This payment will help support the additional salary costs of teachers joining the leadership group; it will be for schools to decide on a case-by-case basis what pay point on the leadership pay spine would be appropriate taking into account the nature of the post. These payments will be available for academic year 2000–01 only. Thereafter, the additional resources will be included in the local authority funding system and schools' delegated budgets in the normal way.

In addition, the Government will in England make a specified amount of extra resource available for the same period of time as the threshold grant to support the costs to schools of high-performing heads, deputies and Advanced Skills Teachers progressing up their individual pay ranges from September 2000. This will help ensure that excellent achievement among these teachers is recognised and rewarded more consistently—an issue to which the Review Body has drawn attention in paragraph 147 of the current report. The DfEE will consult stakeholders on the operation of this funding, including the most appropriate mechanism for distributing these funds.

In Wales, funding for the pay consequences of teachers' pay restructuring will be made as additional increases to local authorities to enable them to meet the costs of the various elements. The National Assembly is providing an additional £14.5 million in 2000–01, bringing the overall increase in local authorities' spending power in 2000–01 to £91 million. The National Assembly has been consulting on the arrangements for distribution of those additional amounts.

Y AVAILABLE

Taking account of this funding, the additional costs arising within Education Standard Spending from 1 September 2000 are estimated as £7.5 million in respect of the assimilation of classroom teachers to the new pay system and of restructuring the pay of special school heads. Other assimilation costs may arise depending on local decisions by schools; the Review Body is therefore unable to estimate the overall level of such costs.

Next Steps

I am grateful to the Review Body for recommending a general increase at a level which is fair and which can be implemented without staging. I hope teachers will welcome the fact that they will receive their pay increase in full on 1 April this year. I will now initiate consultation with the teacher associations, the employer organisations and other interested parties, as required under section 2(1) of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991, before I make provision by order for teachers' pay and conditions in 2000–01.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to take on further consultants and service providers for intervention work in local education authorities. [108317]

Ms Estelle Morris: We will shortly be advertising for organisations interested in providing consultancy support and delivering education services in the event of intervention in local education authorities. This will include extending the remit of the work undertaken by consultants to provide a wide range of general management consultancy and advice. Advertisements will appear in the national press and specialist press from 2 February.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the percentage of children with moderate learning difficulties who are fully included in education in mainstream schools in each local education authority in England; and if he will make a statement. [107672]

Jacqui Smith: Information by specific types of learning difficulty is not collected centrally.

However, in January 1999, returns of the Annual Schools' Census showed that, in England, 59 per cent. of all pupils with statements of SEN were being educated in mainstream schools.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the inclusion of children with moderate learning difficulties in mainstream schools. [107671]

Jacqui Smith: Promoting the inclusion of children with learning difficulties within mainstream schools, where parents want it and appropriate support can be provided, is a cornerstone of the Government's special educational needs strategy. The education of children with special needs is a key challenge for the nation, and critical to the creation of a fully inclusive society. There are strong educational, as well as social and moral, grounds for educating pupils with special needs or disabilities with their peers.

The SEN/Disability Rights Bill—which will be introduced later this session—will strengthen the right to a mainstream place for pupils with special needs. Where parents want a mainstream setting for their child our policy is to try to provide it. Equally, when parents want a specialist setting for their child it is important that their wishes are respected. Our approach has been practical, not dogmatic. We are advocating inclusion by choice and have underlined that there remains a continuing and vital role for special schools. The key objective must be to safeguard the interests of all children and to ensure that they achieve to their full potential.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of those who leave the unemployment pool based on the claimant count reapply for benefit within 12 months of securing employment by region. [107229]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 1 February 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to answer your parliamentary question about the proportion of those leaving the claimant and finding work who rejoin within 12 months. Following are estimates based on the 5% sample cohort of claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance.

Of those leaving the claimant count during 1998 and known to have found work as the reason for ceasing their claim, the proportions of these who started another claim within 12 months of ceasing their original claim, were as follows.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hunting

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which members of the inquiry team chaired by Lord Burns investigating hunting have been members of a pro-field sports organisation; [106954]

(2) which of the members of the inquiry team into hunting, chaired by Lord Burns, have made a (a) financial and (b) in kind contribution to a pro-field sports organisation (i) event and (ii) hunt; [106955]

(3) which members of the inquiry team chaired by Lord Burns benefited (a) from hospitality given by a pro-field sports organisation, (b) from income from a pro-field sports organisations either as (i) an employee consultant and (ii) a paid advocate and (c) from other financial benefits from such organisations before they were appointed to the inquiry; [106958]

(4) which members of the inquiry team chaired by Lord Burns into hunting have (a) presided over, (b) been commissioned by and (c) worked for an organisation with affiliation to a (i) pro-field sports organisation and (ii) hunt; [106956]

(5) which of the members of the inquiry team chaired by Lord Burns into hunting have (a) taken part in and (b) attended a hunt as a subscribing member, supporter or follower; and when and where they did so. [106957]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 25 January 2000]: Inquiries with the Secretariat of the inquiry informs me that none of the members of the inquiry team has made a financial or in-kind contribution to a pro-field sports organisation, event or hunt. Nor have any of the inquiry team been members of a pro-field sports organisation.

With one exception, none of the members of the inquiry team has attended a hunt in any capacity. As part of research into hunting Professor Winter was present to observe a hunt on two occasions in 1991–92. The published research, "Economic and Social Aspects of Deer Hunting on Exmoor and the Quantocks", was funded by the National Trust. As a child, Professor Winter was taken to hunts on about half a dozen occasions.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) of 9 December 1999, Official Report, column 617W, announcing the membership of the inquiry, gave details of Dr. Edwards' and Professor Michael Winter's association with the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. Professor Marsh is a Governor of the College. None of them has had any connection with the beagle pack, which is owned and managed by a Trust (separate from the College) and available to students through a College Student Union Club.

In 1993, the Royal Agricultural College received a small grant from the Standing Conference on Countryside Sports to carry out research into the implications of pheasant shooting.

Professor Sir John Marsh was Director of the Centre for Agricultural Strategy, which, like the Royal Agricultural College, attended meetings of the Standing Conference on Countryside Sports.

Lord Soulsby of Swaffham Prior was commissioned by the British Field Sports Society to carry out an evaluation of the report on deer hunting, "The Behavioural and Physiological Effects of Culling Red Deer", by Professor Patrick Bateson, together with other evidence. Lord Soulsby received expenses, but no payment, for this work.

The Secretariat informs me that Lord Soulsby of Swaffham Prior, Professor Sir John Marsh and Professor Winter received refreshments when attending meetings organised by the Countryside Alliance and, in Professor Marsh's and Professor Winter's case, by the Standing Conference on Countryside Sports. We are informed that neither they nor the other members of the Inquiry team have received any income or other financial benefits from any pro-hunt organisation.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is satisfied that the Committee of Inquiry will provide an objective view on the issues before the Committee.

Local Election Pilot Schemes

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what applications he has received from local authorities wanting to run pilot schemes at local elections in May. [108275]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We hope that the Representation of the People Bill will receive Royal Assent in time to allow the first pilot schemes of innovative electoral procedures to be run at local elections in May.

Clause 10(11) of the Bill allows for applications to be submitted before the Bill receives Royal Assent.

44 local authorities have submitted applications to run 64 pilot schemes.

Of these, 21 involve early voting, 14 involve all postal ballots, eight involve electronic voting or counting, seven involve changes to the absent vote arrangements, six involve weekend voting, four involve a mobile ballot box, two involve an extension to polling hours, one involves voter notification, one involves a freepost facility. Details are set out in the table.

My officials will notify local authorities by 14 February whether my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary would be minded to approve their applications should the Bill receive Royal Assent in time for schemes to be run in May.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of his Department's staff were (a) registered disabled, (b) women, (c) from ethnic minorities and (d) from (i) independent, (ii) grammar and (iii) other schools in (1) 1970, (2) 1979, (3) 1989 and (4) 1999. [106763]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The percentage of permanent staff recorded centrally as having a disability in the Home Office, including the Prison Service, was 0.6 per cent. on 1 April 1999. Detailed figures were given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby) by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 21 December 1999, Official Report, columns 473–74W.

The recorded percentage of female permanent staff in the Home Office, excluding the Prison Service, was 51.8 per cent. on 1 April 1999. The recorded percentage of female staff in the Prison Service was 26.5 per cent. on 21 December 1999. Detailed figures were given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mrs. Cryer) by my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary on 12 January 2000, Official Report, columns 176–77W.

The percentage of permanent staff of ethnic minority origin recorded centrally as being in the Home Office, including the Prison Service, was 5.0 per cent. on 1 April 1999. Detailed figures were also given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby) by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 20 December 1999, Official Report, columns 367W-68W.

Detailed disability, ethnicity, and gender breakdowns for 1970, 1979, and 1989 are not available except at disproportionate cost. The available published staffing figures may be found in Civil Service Statistics, a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on the schools attended by civil servants is not recorded centrally and therefore is not available for the periods requested except at disproportionate cost.

Mike Tyson

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he discussed with the Prime Minister or his Office the matter of whether to allow Mr. Mike Tyson into the UK before announcing his decision. [106650]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 25 January 2000]: It is the normal convention under this and previous Governments that discussions that take place between Ministers are not disclosed.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Data Protection Registrar on the Data Protection (conditions under paragraph 3 of Part II of Schedule 1) Order 1999; and if he will make a statement. [107067]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In the course of consultations during the preparation of the Order, the Data Protection Registrar indicated her preference for it to include a requirement for data controllers to record the third party source of information processed subject to its terms, but that she was otherwise content with its provisions requiring them to provide data subjects with information and to record the decision-making process in cases where disclosure of information where a notice has been received from an individual would involve disproportionate effort. In considering the provisions of the Order, we concluded that a third party recording requirement would impose a burden on business disproportionate to any data protection benefits which it might yield.

State Visits

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet the Metropolitan police in advance of events with security requirements similar to those of a State Visit. [107116]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Liaison between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Metropolitan police normally takes place prior to State Visits or similar events involving overseas visitors. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will be considering whether the Home Office should also contribute to such discussions.

Firearms

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of criminal incidents in which shotguns were used in the United Kingdom, excluding Northern Ireland, which resulted in (a) unlawful death, (b) unlawful wounding and (c) no physical injury, and in each category showing the total number of incidents in which a licensed weapon was used by a person with legal access to that weapon, for 1994 to 1999; [107054]

(2) how many criminal incidents involving illegally modified shotguns resulting in (a) unlawful death, (b) unlawful wounding and (c) no physical injury there were in Great Britain in each year since 1994, separately identifying the number of incidents in which a licensed weapon was used by a person with legal access to that weapon; [107112]

(3) what was the total number of criminal incidents in which (a) firearms, excluding revolvers and automatic pistols, and (b) (i) revolvers and (ii) automatic pistols were used in the United Kingdom, excluding Northern Ireland, and which resulted in (1) unlawful death, (2) unlawful wounding and (3) no physical injury, in each category showing the total number of incidents in which a licensed weapon was used by a person with legal access to that weapon, for 1994 to 1999. [107059]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The table relates to Great Britain and provides the readily available information. 'Handguns' include pistols/revolvers, no further breakdown being available in the statistics collected centrally. 'Other firearms' includes all other firearms except shotguns (ie rifles, air weapons, imitations, 'supposed' and 'other' firearms). Fatal and other injuries involve weapons being fired and, for England and Wales only, being used as a blunt instrument. Only in cases of fatal injury (ie homicide) is the legal status of the firearms collected centrally and this is shown in cases where the weapon was known to be legally held.

Figures for 1999 are not yet available.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) revolvers, (b) automatic pistols, (c) other firearms and (d) shotguns have been obtained from (i) civilian registered owners, (ii) public bodies and (iii) owners who are unregistered or illegally in possession of such a weapon since 1997. [107113]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the source of firearms is not collected centrally.

Radio Communications Project

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the proposals made by John Jarvis in a letter to him of 19 November 1999 for provision of the requirements of the Public Sector Radio Communications Project; and if he will make a statement. [107409]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Mr. Jarvis wrote jointly to me and to my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 19 November with a proposal for an alternative to the Public Safety Radio Communications Project (PSRCP). Officials at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will shortly be advising Mr. Jarvis that his proposed approach would not meet the user specification for the PSRCP.

The PSRCP will provide the police with new, state-of-the-art radio communications using the most suitable available standard, Trans European Trunked Radio (TETRA). This standard will, unlike Mr. Jarvis's proposed solution, provide a common platform for voice and data communication services.

As I announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Hope) on 13 January 2000, Official Report, column 214W, we have invited the chosen service provider, British Telecom plc, to proceed with the necessary preparatory work in the expectation that a contract will be signed shortly.

Misuse of Drugs Act 1971

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. [107386]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government keep the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 under review to combat changes in drug misuse patterns, and currently have plans to bring 36 ecstasy-type substances (phenethylamine derivatives) under the control of Schedule 2 to the Act. When this change is made, guidance will be issued, for example to the police, courts and British Medical Association.

We are also currently considering whether further guidance is needed in respect of Section 8 of the Act, under which it is an offence for the occupier or manager of any premises knowingly to suffer or permit the premises to be used for the producing or supplying of a controlled drug.

Sexual Abuse

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were reported to the police alleging sexual abuse in the last year for which figures are available in (a) South Yorkshire and (b) the United Kingdom; how many cases progressed to a court hearing in (a) and (b); and how many in each category resulted in a conviction. [107519]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The number of alleged sexual abuse cases reported to the police is not available. The total number of sexual offences recorded by the police, and the number of prosecutions and convictions for sexual offences for South Yorkshire, and England and Wales, are as follows.

	South Yorkshire	England and Wales
Number of sexual offences recorded in year ended June 1999	676	37,104
Number of prosecutions for sexual offences in year ended June 1999[1]	143	7,726
Number of convictions[2] for sexual offences in year ended June 1999[1]	109	4,375

[1] Includes provisional figures
[2] Includes persons proceeded against in earlier years or for other offences

It should be noted that as the recorded crime figures relate to offences, and the number of prosecutions and convictions relate to offenders, the two types of data cannot be directly compared.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for sexual abuse of children under the age of 10 years there were in the last year for which figures are available, in (a) South Yorkshire and (b) the United Kingdom. [107520]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not available centrally.

The Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not hold information about the characteristics of individual cases (in this instance the age of a victim) apart from those that are evident from the description of the offence with which the defendant has been charged.

Police Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number and percentage of police vehicles involved in accidents while responding to an emergency or otherwise in pursuit were (a) motorway patrol vehicles, (b) armed response vehicles and (c) other police vehicles for each year since 1995. [107399]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information available centrally does not include the categories of vehicles requested. But a Home Office study of deaths and serious injuries resulting from police vehicle accidents which was published in 1997 contains this table giving the sorts of police vehicles involved in 1990–93:

Table 17: Role of the police vehicles involved in fatal/serious injury Police Vehicle Accidents: 1990–1993

	Number	Percentage
Traffic	215	27.5

Criminal Investigation Department (CID) Divisional	40	5.1
CID Central	11	1.4
Surveillance	13	1.7
Protection	4	0.5
Territorial Support Group	3	0.4
Police Support Unit	4	0.5
Dog	22	2.8
Other	31	4.0
Total	780	100.0

Note:
Figures in Table 17 exclude 64 cases where the information was no longer available at the time of the research

ORBIS Computer System

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the ORBIS computer system for the administration of firearms was installed by the Metropolitan Police; what was the cost of the installation; what was the cost of the system in the last financial year for which figures are available; what is the contract cost in the current financial year; and for what time period was the initial contract and with what options. [107402]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that the installation of the ORBIS computer system was completed and accepted by the Metropolitan Police on 15 October 1999. The cost of installation, inclusive of computer hardware and software costs and the salaries of the Metropolitan police staff involved, totalled £265,000. The only costs for the system have been incurred in the current financial year and, inclusive of the first year's maintenance, amount to £114,350. The contract is for two years initially, renewable thereafter by payment of the appropriate support costs.

Research (Primates)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many primates were used in research in the United Kingdom in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [107595]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the use of animals in scientific procedures is published each year in the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals (Great Britain). Tables 1, 18d and 18e refer to the numbers of primates used by type and also provide information on the primary purpose of the procedure. In 1997, the total number of primates used was 3,908. In 1998, the total was 3,655. There were no primates used in Northern Ireland in 1997 and 1998.

Firearms (Compensation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many compensation payments are outstanding under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement. [108066]

Mr. Charles Clarke: As at 27 January, there were just 748 claims outstanding under the firearms compensation schemes. Of these, 643 claims were ones in which payment offers have been made to the claimants concerned but have yet to be accepted.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of the monitoring of illegal drugs in prisons for each of the last three years. [106562]

Mr. Boateng: The table shows expenditure on mandatory drug testing in prisons for each of the last three years, excluding staff costs which are not collected.

Expenditure on mandatory drug testing in prisons

Year	£
1997–98	1,599,137
1998–99	1,550,254
1999–2000[1]	1,252,357

Departmental Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 373W, on departmental research contracts, if he will place a copy of the standard research contract in use by his Department in the Library. [107097]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A copy of the standard research contract used by the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate has been placed in the Library. The document is currently being reviewed and an updated version will be placed in the Library once available. There is no standard contract in the case of scientific research due to the unique nature of each contract let.

Police Recruits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many bids have been received for funding for extra police recruits under year one of the Crime Fighting Fund; if he will list the amount of money and number of officers requested in each bid and in total; and if he will make a statement; [107956]

(2) how many additional police recruits he estimates are to be funded in response to bids from police forces for funds from year one of the Crime Fighting Fund; and if he will make a statement. [107957]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Forty three forces have bid for a total of 2,908 officers under year one of the Crime Fighting Fund Recruitment Scheme. Details are set out in the table. Based on the costs set out in the Bidding Guidelines, which were issued for forces and a copy placed in the Library on 2 December 1999, funding for 2,908 officers would total more than £96 million. We are currently assessing the bids against the criteria set out in the Guidelines and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, will be announcing the results shortly.

Press Releases

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Press releases his Department issued in each year from 1995 to 1999. [107955]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information for my Department is as follows:

Year	Number
1995	308
1996	404
1997	386
1998	524
1999	450

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy that local authorities should from 1 April, take over financial responsibility for asylum seekers disposed to their areas before that date; and if he will make a statement. [108042]

Mrs. Roche: Asylum seekers who claim asylum and support after 1 April will make their claim for support from the National Asylum Support Service in the Home Office. It will be the responsibility of the National Asylum Support Service to determine eligibility for support and to identify a suitable support package. Where local authorities provide accommodation and support for these asylum seekers, it will be under contract to the National Asylum Support Service.

Asylum seekers who claimed asylum and support prior to 1 April will continue to be supported under the existing arrangements.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of places which will be needed to accommodate asylum seekers under the new arrangements, due to come into force on 1 April; and what progress he has made towards achieving that target. [108043]

Mrs. Roche: In the financial year 2000–01, we are planning on the basis that 35,000 will require full accommodation support. The remainder will either seek support to meet their essential living needs only or will not seek support.

We issued an invitation to tender to a number of accommodation providers. Negotiations are still proceeding. Contracts are expected to be awarded towards the end of February. In parallel, we are in discussion with local government with a view to them providing a substantial amount of the accommodation requirements.

Correspondence

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham will receive a reply to his letters of 20 September and of 10 November 1999 regarding the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [107960]

Mrs. Roche: I wrote to the hon. Member on 1 February 2000. I am very sorry for the delay.

Animal Experiments

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals hold a Home Office licence to experiment on animals. [107459]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The most recent figures available are for December 1999. There were 14,777 live personal licences, issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, in Great Britain.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many institutions hold a licence to experiment on animals which covers students who may not be required individually to hold a licence while performing their studies. [107460]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, the Certificate of Designation for an institution does not license individuals. Anyone performing a regulated procedure on a live animal must hold a personal licence in accordance with the 1986 Act. The procedure must be applied as part of a programme of work specified in a project licence which authorises the application of that procedure.

Currently, there are 60 project licences for the use of animals in education and training, held mostly by university employees. In each case, a licence has been granted for an educational objective which cannot be realistically taught by alternative methods. Some procedures are demonstrated by the tutor rather than conducted by the students themselves.

Spray Paints

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restrict further the sale of spray paints. [107461]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are concerned about the damaging effects of graffiti on neighbourhoods and there are substantial penalties available under the Criminal Damage Act 1971: where the criminal damage is more than £2,000, the maximum penalty is 10 years imprisonment for those aged 18 or over, and up to two years detention in a Young Offenders Institution for those aged 15–17. However, within the maximum limit sentencing is a matter for the courts to decide in the light of all the circumstances of the case.

The police already have the power to arrest anyone whom they reasonably suspect has committed or is about to commit the offence of criminal damage. Where vandals are found in possession of a paint spray can with the intention of damaging property or already having done so, the criminal law can be brought to bear. We do not have any plans, therefore, to legislate specifically against the sale or carrying of spray paints but, of course, the matter will be kept under review.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those councils which have (a) sought and (b) had meetings with him or his ministerial colleagues in the last three months in order to make representations about their standard spending assessment allocation. [106817]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We consulted local authorities on our proposals for the Local Government Finance Settlement for 2000–01 on 25 November 1999. We made it clear that, given the degree of stability we introduced into the settlement this year, we would not invite local authorities to hold meetings with Ministers during consultation on our proposals. During this period we received written requests for meetings from or on behalf of eight local authorities. These were:

Surrey County Council

London Borough of Merton

Poole District Council

Reigate and Banstead District Council

Shropshire County Council

South Yorkshire Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Royal Borough of Windsor and Maidenhead

Leicester City Council.

No Minister from this Department met those authorities to discuss their representations. I did however have separate meetings during that period with the representatives of county councils, district councils and metropolitan district councils on 21 December at the suggestion of the Local Government Association. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and the Regions also met with the Association of London Government on 10 January and the Local Government Association on 13 January. All representations, whether made in writing or at meetings, were fully considered in reaching final decisions on the settlement.

RAF East Camp

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress in considering the planning issues arising from the RAF East Camp site proposed development in Mill Hill; and when he will announce his decision. [107285]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This is a complex case and it was necessary to re-open the public inquiry in September 1999. The Inspector's supplementary report was received on 22 October 1999 and the Secretary of State's consideration of this case is at an advanced stage. His decision will be issued shortly.

Recycling

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on the recycling of materials produced by his Department. [107388]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department's policy is to promote recycling of office waste. Our target is to recover 40 per cent. of total office waste, with at least 25 per cent. coming from recycling or composting, in 2000–01 and to continue to increase the amount recovered and recycled by 10 per cent. each year to achieve 70 per cent. recovery or recycling in 2003–04.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish tables showing the levels achieved by each local authority in relation to the percentage of household rubbish recycled. [107959]

Mr. Mullin: I have placed a list in the House of Commons Library setting out ranges of household recycling rates for local authorities in England and Wales based on data from the 1997–98 Municipal Waste Survey.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish a table showing the airlines operating out of and having scheduled flights to the UK and the number of crashes of planes of each airline broken down in terms of (a) crashes per one million passengers carried, (b) crashes per 10,000 take offs and landings and (c) crashes per one million miles travelled, occurring in the last year. [107530]

Mr. Mullin: As aircraft accidents are very rare events, statistics in this format serve no useful purpose and are not used by either the Department or the Civil Aviation Authority. For UK registered aircraft, the CAA use an accident rate per million hours flown averaged over three years as a performance indicator. These figures are published in the CAA's annual report. In addition, the CAA has carried out a review of fatal accidents by world regions. The results of this review were published in CAP 681 "Global Fatal Accident Review 1980–96". Copies of both documents are already in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if Her Majesty's Government have received the report prepared for the Irish Government on the radiological and environmental implications of the disposal in the Irish Sea of radioactive waste arising from United Kingdom sources, published in January 2000. [107511]

Mr. Meacher: My Department has received a copy of the report prepared by the Irish Task Force on the Dumping of Radioactive Material in the Maritime Area.

The Irish report supports the findings of the UK National Radiological Protection Board's report "Assessment of the Radiological Implications of Dumping in Beaufort's Dyke and Other Coastal Waters from the 1950s" (November 1997). It concludes that the potential radiation doses from the dumped material are well below those considered significant for radiological protection purposes.

Korean Airlines Crash

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the depleted uranium weights that were on board the Korean Airlines plane that crashed outside Stansted Airport in January. [107447]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 31 January 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 122W.

Mortgage Rates

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the standard national rate on mortgages set by local authorities; and if he will change the way the rate is set to bring it closer to commercial interest rates. [108037]

Mr. Mullin: The standard national rate of interest on local authority mortgages is declared from time to time by the Secretary of State in accordance with Schedule 16 to the Housing Act 1985, taking into account prevailing building society interest rates. The current standard national rate is 6.51 per cent. There are no current plans for changes to the way in which the standard national rate is calculated.

Private Rented Property

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the impact on his policy of the Spath-Holme Judgment of 20 January regarding rent increases in private rented property. [107632]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 31 January 2000]: We are giving careful consideration to the implications of the Court of Appeal's decision to quash the Rent Acts (Maximum Fair Rent) Order 1999. We remain committed to protecting tenants from excessive increases in fair rents. We intend to petition another place seeking permission to appeal the Court's decision.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what percentage the average local authority social services budget exceeds the corresponding SSA element. [107986]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The average local authority social services budget exceeds its corresponding SSA for 1999–2000 by 10.9 per cent.

Property Insurers

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require insurance companies to insist on minimum standards of maintenance and repair of leased properties they insure. [107732]

Mr. Mullin: We have no plans to do so. An insurance company could only enforce such standards by refusing to pay any claim where minimum standards had not been met. This would not help leaseholders. Where landlords are responsible for maintaining property but fail to do so properly, leaseholders should consider asking a Leasehold Valuation Tribunal to appoint a new manager for the building.

However, we are considering options for regulating managers of residential leasehold property as part of our wider leasehold reform package. Such arrangements could be used to tackle poor management standards and to ensure that leasehold property is properly maintained.

Parish and Town Councils

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the role of parish and town councils. [107307]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Parish councils are an essential part of the structure of local democracy in our country and they will continue to play a key role in many of our towns and villages. Modern and dynamic parish councils have a real part to play in the democratic constitution of this country.

Departmental Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 338W, on departmental research contracts, if he will place in the Library a copy of the standard research contract in use by his Department. [107098]

Mr. Mullin: As requested, a copy of the standard research contract conditions in use by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons. Minor variations are made to the contract conditions from time to time.

Local Authority Pension Funds

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish tables showing the amounts of income lost to each local authority pension fund since budget changes to dividend tax credits. [107958]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Information on any loss of income by individual local authority pension funds due to budget changes to dividend tax credits is not available centrally.

West Sussex County Council

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his assessment of the permanent annual increase in costs accruing to West Sussex County Council resulting from recent changes in the rules for the taxation of investments. [107872]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Information to assess the financial effect of changes in the rules for the taxation of individual local authority investments is not available centrally.

Driving Test

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received on the theory element of the driving test; how many such representations were from national organisations; and what plans he has to ensure that all eligible members of the public have equal access to a theory test. [107456]

Mr. Hill: Since October 1999, one Parliamentary Question has been asked about the driving theory test—I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 November 1999, Official Report, column 601W—and we have answered five letters. One letter was from a driving instructor association, and one from a road safety organisation. As part of our social inclusion agenda, we make every effort to ensure that all candidates have their needs accommodated. Test centres have been furbished to meet the needs of the physically disabled. Candidates normally select their answers by touching the screen, but help is available where required. Audio support using headphones is provided in English and Welsh, and in 14 other languages. The test is available with British Sign Language. Candidates with special needs are allowed up to double the normal time to complete the test.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what allowances the Driving Standards Agency makes for people with dyslexia to take the theory test during a driving test. [107455]

Mr. Hill: Since 4 January, the driving theory test has been delivered using a touch screen computer system. This has significant benefits for dyslexic candidates, who can use earphones to listen to an English language voice-over reading the questions and answer options. Dyslexic candidates are allowed up to double the normal time to complete the test.

Correspondence

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he will reply to the letter of 6 July 1999 from the hon. Member for South Suffolk; [108044]

(2) when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member from South Suffolk of 12 January. [108045]

Mr. Hill: I replied to the hon. Member on Monday 31 January. I have supplied a copy for ease of reference.

Waste Incinerators

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on the circumstances in which planning inquiries may be held on proposals to build waste incinerators, and the rights of objectors to such proposals to have a public inquiry. [108320]

Mr. Raynsford: The building of a waste incinerator requires planning permission, for which an application must be made to the local planning authority. Where a local planning authority refuses an application for planning permission, grants it subject to conditions or fails to determine it within eight weeks, the person applying for permission may appeal. The appeal may be dealt with by public inquiry or hearing, although most are dealt with by written representations. An inquiry is likely to be held in the very small proportion of cases where my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State considers it necessary to call in a planning application to determine it himself, instead of leaving it to the planning authority.

My right hon. Friend's policy on call-ins was stated in a written answer by my predecessor on 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 138W and this remains the position. He will be very selective about calling in planning applications. He will, in general, only take this step if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. Such cases may include, for example, those which in his opinion:

may conflict with national policies;

could have significant effects beyond their immediate locality;

give rise to substantial regional or national controversy;

raise significant architectural and urban design issues; or may involve the interests of national security or of foreign Governments.

However each case will continue to be considered on its individual merits.

Objectors to planning applications, including those for waste incinerators, do not have a right to a planning inquiry into their objections. However, they may put their objections to the local planning authority considering the application to which they are opposed, and the authority must have regard to their objections in reaching its decision. Similarly, where an appeal has been lodged against a refusal to an application, objectors may put their points to the inspector, either in writing or, where an inquiry or hearing is held, in person.

Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will appoint a new chairman of the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee. [108366]

Mr. Hill: I have today announced the appointment of Stewart Francis as the new Chairman of the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee.

LTS Trains Ltd.

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if there is a further exemption order for the fleet of new trains to be introduced into service by LTS Trains Ltd. in respect of any of the provisions of the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations 1998; and if he will make a statement. [108367]

Mr. Hill: As my predecessor explained in her answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Angela Smith) on 26 May 1999, Official Report, column 174W, following an application by LTS Rail Ltd., an Order relating to the exemption of Class 357 trains was laid in Parliament. The Order subsequently came into force on 18 June 1999.

We have received a further application from LTS Trains Ltd. relating to Class 357 trains. This seeks to revoke the original Order and replace it with a new Order to extend the original exemptions to additional vehicles and add new exemptions. This has been discussed with our statutory advisers the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee.

An exemption Order relating to the exemption of the Class 357 trains has been laid in Parliament today. Copies are available from the Library.

These further exemptions will not prevent disabled people from using the new trains. Indeed, we believe that their introduction will make a significant contribution to improving mobility opportunities for disabled people.

Government Panel on Sustainable Development

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the response to the Government Panel on Sustainable Development's fifth annual report will be published. [108414]

Mr. Meacher: I am pleased to announce that the Government's Response to the Fifth Annual Report of the Government Panel on Sustainable Development has been published, and that we have been able to respond positively to the Panel's recommendations. The Panel is a valuable source of advice for Government in the achievement of sustainable development. I wish to express my gratitude to the Convenor of the Panel, Sir Crispin Tickell, and his colleagues for their continued commitment to helping to identify new sustainable ways of enhancing the quality of life and prosperity for everyone.

Examples where the Government has been able to respond positively to the Panel's recommendations are:

on sustainable development and employment: we are forging links between employment and sustainable development, through the National Skills Agenda and the Environment Task Force option under the New Deal; on environmental issues and European Union: the Prime Minister's Step Change Initiative is encouraging closer co-operation in environment policy issues. The Government's continued support for the Cardiff principles is also key to achieving effective integration of sustainable development in policy making; on land use legislation: we have introduced new draft Planning Policy Guidance demonstrating the Government's commitment to developing positive policies to deliver sustainable development;

also the forthcoming Urban and Rural White Papers will underline our commitment to protecting and enhancing the environment, and building sustainable communities to foster an inclusive society; finally, on the international front, we continue our efforts to protect and enhance biodiversity.

I am placing copies of the response in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Zimbabwe

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many arms export licence applications for Zimbabwe her Department has examined for each month since August 1997. [106986]

Clare Short: Since August 1997, my Department has examined, for each month, for Zimbabwe the following numbers of applications for Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) concerning the export of goods listed as subject to control in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, usually known as the military list:

August 1997: None
September 1997: 2 SIELs
October 1997: 4 SIELs
November 1997: 4 SIELs
December 1997: 4 SIELs, 2 OIELs
January 1998: 2 SIELs, 2 OIELs
February 1998: 4 SIELs, 1 OIEL
March 1998: 5 SIELs, 4 OIELs
April 1998: 4 SIELs, 5 OIELs
May 1998: 5 SIELs, 2 OIELs
June 1998: 1 SIEL, 4 OIELs
July 1998: 2 SIELs, 7 OIELs
August 1998: 2 SIELs, 4 OIELs
September 1998: 4 SIELs, 2 OIELs
October 1998: 3 SIELs, 4 OIELs
November 1998: 3 OIELs
December 1998: 1 SIEL, 3 OIELs
January 1999: 1 SIEL, 5 OIELs
February 1999: 1 SIEL, 5 OIELs
March 1999: 4 OIELs
April 1999: 2 SIELs, 7 OIELs
May 1999: 3 SIELs
June 1999: 7 SIELs
July 1999: 4 SIELs, 2 OIELs
August 1999: 1 SIEL, 3 OIELs
September 1999: 3 OIELs
October 1999: 1 SIEL, 3 OIELs
November 1999: 1 OIEL
December 1999: None
January 2000: 1 SIEL, 4 OIELs.

Serbia (Humanitarian Aid)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her policy is on providing humanitarian aid to towns in Serbia under political control of parties in opposition to the Government. [105362]

Clare Short: My Department's policy on humanitarian assistance is to target the most needy on the basis of verified assessments and full accountability, and not on the basis of political allegiance. We believe it is important that any assistance to Serbia as elsewhere should be based on a proper and reliable assessment of needs, that implementing partners should be carefully selected with an emphasis on reliability, and that scrupulous attention should be paid to accountability and transparency.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 6 December 1999, Official Report, columns 337–38W, on departmental research contracts, if she will (a) state total expenditure on research let by her Department since May 1997 and (b) list the titles of all research contracts let by her Department during 1999 and costing £20,000 or more, stating what is the value of each contract, and in each case whether the contract included (i) departmental veto over publication of the research results, (ii) departmental control over the date of publication of the research and (iii) a requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments; and if she will place a copy of the standard research contract in use by her Department in the Library. [107105]

Clare Short: The best estimate of total expenditure on research remains as stated in my answer of 6 December 1999, Official Report, columns 337–38W. No figures are yet available for this financial year.

I have arranged for a list of research projects over £20,000 let in 1999 to be placed in the Library of the House. This covers 254 projects with a total value of nearly £54 million. The list is not necessarily exhaustive (because research contracts are let by several units in DFID) but shows the overwhelming majority of contracts let during that period.

It also remains the case that the Department's contracts do not provide for departmental veto over publication of research results (except, rarely, where intellectual property rights might otherwise be infringed) or for control over the date of publication of the research. There is no requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments.

I have also arranged for a version of the research contract used by DFID to be placed in the Library of the House. There are slight variations in this contract where it has been tailored to meet the particular needs of different research funding units in the Department.

DEFENCE

Turn-around Times

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average turn-around time to full serviceability in the years 1997, 1998 and 1999 for (a) Tornado GR1/4, (b) Tornado F3, (c) Harrier, (d) Jaguar, (e) Nimrod, (g) Sentry, (h) Tristar, (i) Puma, (j) Sea King and (k) Chinook which had been allocated to undergo (i) servicing at 1 Line, (ii) servicing at 2 Line and (iii) servicing at 3/4 Line. [107280]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is not held centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Tornado

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many replacement engines are available for the Tornado aircraft. [107049]

Mr. Spellar: As at Thursday 27 January 2000, there were 30 spare engines available to support the RAF Tornado fleet.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Consultation

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public consultation exercises on policy matters carried out by his Department and its agencies in each of the last five years; who was consulted and by what means; how responses were analysed; how and in what form the results were transmitted to those responsible for the consultation; how the results of the consultation were published; and what analysis has been carried out of the extent and nature of policy changes resulting from the consultation. [106293]

Dr. Reid: During the last five years the numbers of public consultations undertaken by the Scottish Office and in relation to which the Departmental Library hold public files were as follows:

Year	Number of public consultations
1999[1]	78
1998	107
1997	76
1996	112
1995	86

[1] to 30 June 1999

Detailed information in the form requested by my hon. Friend is either not available or could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which projects relating to his Department that appeared in the Private Finance Panel's list of 29 November 1995 (a) have been completed, (b) are still pending, (c) have been dropped and (d) are being pursued by means other than a public private partnership. [105879]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 24 January 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 118W.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 386W, on departmental research contacts, if he will (a) state the total expenditure on research let by his Department since May 1997 and (b) list the titles of all research contracts let by his Department for the financial year 1998–99 and costing £20,000 or more, stating what was the value of each contract, and in each case whether the contract included (i) departmental veto over publication of the research results, (ii) departmental control over the date of publication of the research and (iii) a requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments. [107101]

Dr. Reid: Information about individual research contracts could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Broadcasting

20. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the regulatory environment for broadcasting in the United Kingdom. [105956]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government's assessment of the regulatory environment for broadcasting in the United Kingdom was set out in the joint DCMS/DTI Green Paper "Regulating Communications—approaching convergence in the information age" and, in the light of responses, our conclusions were published in June last year as "Regulating Communications: The Way Ahead". But it is now clear that a more fundamental reassessment is needed. I shall shortly be announcing how this is to be taken forward.

Staff Bonuses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the New Year period; what were the (a) maximum and (b) minimum bonuses paid; how many people received the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum payments; and if he will make a statement. [104500]

Mr. Chris Smith: DCMS and Royal Parks Agency would have difficulty in identifying the actual amounts spent or the maximum and minimum payments made to staff working over the new year period from other overtime payments. The pay information for non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally. The information required could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Only a small number of DCMS and Royal Parks Agency staff were required to work over this period.

World Class Performance Programme

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the sports eligible for the World Class Performance Programme. [107654]

Lottery Grants (Shrewsbury)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the total amount of National Lottery grant awarded to organisations in Shrewsbury and Atcham in each year since the National Lottery's inception; and if he will make a statement. [107259]

Kate Hoey: The value of National Lottery awards to organisations based in the Shrewsbury and Atcham constituency for each year since 1995 (the first year in which awards were made) is shown in the following table. The figures are taken from my Department's National Lottery awards database, using information supplied by the National Lottery distributing bodies.

	Value of awards to Shrewsbury and Atcham
1995	808,571
1996	1,610,447
1997	1,238,685
1998	3,053,478
1999	3,198,489

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Staff Bonuses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the new year period; what are the (a) maximum and (b) minimum bonuses paid; how many people received the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum payments; and if he will make a statement. [104490]

Dr. Howells: The information requested for the headquarters Department is not yet available; I will provide a fuller response within the next few weeks.

I have asked the Chief Executives of the Department's agencies to respond directly.

The information in respect of the Department's associated public bodies could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 1 February 2000:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply to your question about extra bonus payments for Insolvency Service staff who worked over the New Year period.

The Service has not yet made any New Year bonus payments: I am in the process of approving 9 payments of £300 (gross) each.

Letter from Ian Jones to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 1 February 2000:

I am responding on behalf of the Employment Tribunals Service to your question about payments to staff over the New Year. I can confirm that no extra bonuses, above usual payments to staff working over the New Year period, were paid by the Employment Tribunals Service.

Letter from David Hendon to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 1 February 2000:

The Radiocommunications Agency adopted the DTI scheme of £65 for work between one and six hours subject to an upper limit of £130. 13 staff qualified under this scheme with 5 of these receiving the higher rate.

The Agency also has a Special Bonus Scheme (representing 0.4% of its total Pay budget) to reward exceptional performance in demanding circumstances and 5 staff will receive £500 under that scheme.

Letter from Alison Brimelow to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 1 February 2000:

The Patent Office paid a total of £41,000 in special payments to key staff over the New Year period. This represented payments to 41 individuals of £1,000 each. All staff received the same amount. They were required to undertake final confidence testing of systems, prepare the systems for normal operations, and carry out any remedial work required between 31 December 1999 and 4 January 2000.

Letter from John Holden to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 1 February 2000:

I have been asked to reply to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on Agency bonuses paid over the New Year period. The information you require for Companies House is as follows:

Extra bonuses paid over the 1999/2000 New Year Period

Total amount paid: £28,200
Maximum bonus payment: £550
Minimum bonus payment: £50
No. receiving maximum payment: 31
No. receiving minimum payment: 1

Other staff received payments between the maximum and minimum, typically £250-£300, to make up the remainder of the total of £28,200.

Alstom

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the management of Alstom. [106676]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry last met the senior management of Alstom on 4 February last year. Officials in my Department are in regular contact with the company.

Power Industry

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the extent of the United Kingdom's capacity for manufacturing related to the power industry. [106675]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The following table gives figures for value added and other relevant data. The statistics cover the products in Standard Industrial Classifications 28.30 (manufacture of steam generators), part of 29.11 (manufacture of turbines and parts thereof), 3.10 (manufacture of electric motors, generators and transformers) and 31.20 (manufacture of electricity distribution and control apparatus). 1997 is the latest year for which complete figures are available.

Gross value added at factor cost (£ million)	3,084	2,898	2,973
Sales and work done (£ million)	7,400	7,213	7,331
Exports (£ million)	3,542	3,998	4,388
Imports (£ million)	3,474	3,926	4,020
UK market (£ million)	7,332	7,141	6,963
Employment (thousand)	120	109	106

Notes:

1. Gross value added, sales and employment for turbines (as part of SIC29.11) are an estimate only, based on individual product data.
2. Trade data for turbines (as part of 29.11) is calculated on a slightly different basis using individual product data.

UK Competitiveness Indicators

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors underlay the conclusions contained in his report, UK Competitiveness Indicators 1999, that United Kingdom consumers show more inertia and are generally less demanding than in other countries with similar income levels; and if he will make a statement. [106520]

Dr. Howells: Our White Paper "Modern Markets: Confident Consumers" (Cm 4410) sets out how knowledgeable and assertive consumers can spur businesses to compete and innovate, thereby leading to better quality and lower prices. The White Paper contains a series of policies to drive this virtuous circle between consumer demand and business performance. The competitiveness indicators will provide a means of tracking our success vis a vis our leading competitors.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 487–88W, on nuclear materials, if he will set out, in each of the 20 cases of advance notification, the quantity and type of nuclear material, including its isotopic composition, involved; and if he will indicate for what reason nuclear materials from the unsafeguarded military stockpile were not used for the functions set out. [107267]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 27 January 2000]: As I indicated in my answer on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 487–88W, a study bringing together data on these and other withdrawals from safeguards is being conducted. More information on withdrawals from safeguards will be provided later in the year when that study has been completed.

The withdrawals described in my previous answer comprised small quantities of material for use in instrument calibration or radiation detectors, or as analytical tracers or radiological shielding. There are no facilities outside safeguards which manufacture material in such quantities and forms from the military stockpile. Defence establishment requirements for these commercially available specialist materials are currently met by purchase from civil operators.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many permanent withdrawals of nuclear material from safeguards have taken place since the Tripartite UK-Euratom-IAEA Voluntary Safeguards Agreement came into force; and to what purpose material permanently withdrawn was put. [107498]

Dr. Howells: As I indicated in my answer on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 487–88W, a study bringing together data on these and other withdrawals from safeguards is being conducted. I expect to be able to provide more information on withdrawals from safeguards later in the year when that study has been completed.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to initiate negotiations with the European Commission, Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency towards the deletion of Article 14 of the Tripartite Safeguards Agreement of August 1978. [107500]

Dr. Howells: No. Government policy on future withdrawals of nuclear material from safeguards was described in the White Paper published in July 1998 to announce the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review (SDR).

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 487W, on nuclear materials safeguards, if he will set out (a) the number of facility attachments, (b) the number of particular safeguards provisions and (c) the material balance areas existing at each of the plants respectively from which nuclear materials were withdrawn from safeguards. [107512]

Dr. Howells: European Commission particular safeguards provisions (PSPs) exist for the National Physical Laboratory, Nycomed Amersham, and RSL Equipment Ltd., but have yet to be finalised for UKAEA Harwell and Centronics Ltd. None of the plants has been designated by the IAEA for routine safeguards inspection under the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement (INFCIRC/263) and so no facility attachments exist for them. Disclosure of detailed information on nuclear material accountancy arrangements, including on Material Balance Areas (MBAs), would harm national security and would not be in the public interest.

Car Insurance Market

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent assessment he has made of the extent of competition in the UK car insurance market; and if he will make a statement. [107400]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition law in the first instance it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour and possible abuses of a dominant position. I am not aware of any ongoing investigation into the car insurance market by the Office of Fair Trading.

If my hon. Friend has any evidence that competition in the market is not working he should draw it to the attention of the DGFT.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in the last three years, how many bankrupt people who appointed the Official Receiver to act on their behalf as trustee were transferred to a private trustee; and after what periods. [107438]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 28 January 2000]: The number of bankruptcy orders made and the number of cases transferred to Insolvency Practitioners in the years 1997–98, 1998–99 and in the nine months to 31 December 1999 is as follows:

Period	New cases	Cases transferred
1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998	19,713	5,811
1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999	20,508	6,013
1 April 1999 to 31 December 1999	15,812	4,838

The age of cases transferred is not recorded centrally and could only be ascertained at disproportionate cost. However the great majority of cases are transferred as a result of an Insolvency Practitioner being appointed trustee by the Secretary of State on the application of the Official Receiver. Statistics are maintained centrally regarding the age of cases where such applications are made as to whether they are less than or more than five months old. Those statistics show that there is an almost equal split between the two categories.

Street Lighting

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he will take to ensure that competition in electricity connections for street lighting columns can proceed quickly; and if he will make a statement. [107582]

Dr. Howells: The Director General of the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem) will shortly be publishing a paper setting out his proposals for increasing competition in electricity connections. This paper will also address the specific issue of developing competition in electricity connections for street lighting columns.

Cabling (Licences)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it a requirement for the granting of licences to companies for the laying of cables that they share cable trenches with other companies; and if he will make a statement. [107604]

Ms Hewitt: There are no plans to introduce a requirement to share trenches within the scope of Telecommunications Act 1984 licences. While trench sharing between two or more operators often occurs, circumstances of timing and routing make this impractical as a requirement. However, the licences currently issued require operators to explore the possibility of using existing ducts or conduits and the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 places a duty on the highway authorities to co-ordinate the execution of works in the highway.

Additionally the Department has written at both Ministerial and official level to all telecommunications operators with code powers reminding them of their obligation to explore duct sharing and encouraging them to consider trench sharing as a means of reducing unnecessary digging. We have also drawn operators' attention to a new private sector initiative to encourage dig co-ordination.

Recycling

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on the recycling of materials produced by his Department. [107859]

Dr. Howells: At present this Department has schemes in place to recycle all paper, toner cartridges and tin cans. The Department regularly reviews the scope for recycling other materials.

European Southern Observatory

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the authorities of the European Southern Observatory and Governments of nations participating in the European Southern Observatory about United Kingdom involvement in the project. [106370]

Ms Hewitt: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State nor my noble Friend the Minister for Science have had any discussions with the authorities of the European Southern Observatory (ESO), or with Governments of ESO member states about UK participation in ESO.

Any potential future UK membership of, or involvement with, ESO would be funded by the science vote through the budget of the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (PPARC). Senior officials from PPARC have had initial exploratory discussions with ESO officials about potential UK involvement with ESO, but this has not led to any specific recommendations for Ministerial consideration.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what conclusions have been reached in response to the public consultation on Government policy for renewable sources of energy. [108365]

Mrs. Liddell: Renewable sources of energy are an essential element of the Government's Climate Change Programme. They are set to make an increasingly important contribution to the provision of secure, diverse and sustainable energy supplies. Renewable sources of energy will become increasingly important in the new millennium as electricity consumption increases and existing nuclear generating capacity is retired. For all these reasons the Government are committed to increasing the contribution from renewable sources of energy to the UK's energy supplies.

The Government believe that our objective for the renewables industry can best be achieved within the framework of a competitive market. This will give the industry the greatest opportunity for technological innovation and the optimisation of efficiency so that the most cost-effective renewables can be brought forward. In order for this to be achieved the Government intend to give a clear signal to the industry that we are targeting a 10 per cent. share of electricity supply to be provided from renewable sources.

Key elements of our strategy to achieve the policy aim will be:

a new Renewables Obligation on all electricity suppliers; exemption of electricity and heat from renewables from the Climate Change Levy; an expanded support programme for new and renewable energy including research, development, demonstration and dissemination; and, development of a regional strategic approach and targets for renewable energy.

The Renewables Obligation will enable us to make progress towards a target of generating 10 per cent. of our electricity from renewable sources by 2010. Clearly hitting this higher target may, at least in the medium term, mean slightly higher costs to consumers and the acceptability of those higher costs must be fully considered. The necessary legislative powers will be taken in the Utilities Bill which the Government introduced on 20 January. The Renewables Obligation and the associated Renewables (Scotland) Obligation will be an obligation on all licensed suppliers to supply a specified proportion of their electricity supplies from renewable sources of energy. Any additional cost of supplying electricity from renewables will be met by suppliers and may be passed onto their customers. There will be no new levy for these arrangements. The Renewables Obligation will be imposed by a Statutory Instrument that will contain the detailed requirements. The Government expect to require all suppliers to obtain a specified proportion of their electricity from renewables rising year by year to achieve the 2010 target. I shall be consulting the industry, as well as electricity consumers, on the costs of achieving the precise obligation (and the rate of progress towards the overall target and price cap) in advance of the enabling Order being laid before Parliament later this year.

It will be essential to ensure that commercially viable projects already contracted under the NFFO and SRO arrangements continue to attract and retain project finance so that the UK stays on track to source 5 per cent. of its electricity from renewables by 2003. Accordingly, transitional arrangements are being developed by the contracting parties. The Utilities Bill will give powers for secondary legislation to be developed to facilitate this process. The Bill includes powers to continue the operation of the current sections 32 and 33 of the Electricity Act 1989 (relating to NFFO and SRO Orders and the Fossil Fuel Levy) and these measures may be amended to adjust to the new arrangements as necessary.

The renewables industry has made great strides in recent years. It has reduced the costs of the more mature renewable technologies over the last decade to the point where they are rapidly becoming competitive with other energy sources in the UK. The Government hope that the industry can rise to the challenge of the new policy by meeting the proposed targets at an acceptable cost that will not have a major impact on electricity prices. We will be consulting on what increase would be acceptable to consumers in order to promote renewables, but have in mind an increase of 1–2 per cent. in electricity prices by 2010, in return for which there will be real benefits to society from lower greenhouse gas emissions and a more diverse energy supply. This new approach to bringing forward renewables works with the grain of other developments in the electricity supply market. These other changes that the Government and the Regulator are taking forward should more than offset any increase arising from our support for renewables, so electricity prices should continue to fall in real terms over the coming years.

In addition, the Government's new policy will provide a positive strategic approach to planning for renewable energy from the regional level downwards to facilitate its development while continuing to protect the countryside. The Government are therefore proposing that regional renewable energy assessments should set the framework for a more strategic land-use planning approach at regional level, itself providing the framework for local authorities' development plans and decisions on individual energy projects.

This is an exciting time for the renewables industry, and an opportunity for it to move from being a fledgling industry to becoming a mainstream business activity. This policy offers good business opportunities in the home market, which will provide a good base for developing exports. Most importantly, it will make an important contribution to the protection of our environment, while contributing to diversity and security of energy supplies.

I have published today "New and Renewable Energy—Prospects for the 21st Century—Conclusions in Response to the Public Consultation", to coincide with the introduction of the Utilities Bill. This is an initial policy statement to inform discussion of the powers in the Bill to introduce a Renewables Obligation on electricity suppliers. I am also planning to provide a full report containing the proposed programme for renewables later in the year after further discussion with interested parties in the light of this document.

WALES

Child Abuse Inquiry

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish the report of the North Wales Child Abuse Inquiry. [108321]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The printing and translation arrangements for this report are drawing to completion and I intend to present the report and make a statement to the House in the week beginning 14 February.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1999, Official Report, column 370W on departmental research contracts, if he will (a) state the total expenditure on research contracts let by his Department since May 1997 and (b) list the titles of all research contracts let by his Department during 1999 costing £20,000 or more, stating the value of each contract, and in each case whether the contract included (i) departmental veto over publication of the research results, (ii) departmental control over the date of publication of the research and (iii) a requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments; and if he will place a copy of the standard research contract currently in use by his Department in the Library. [107092]

Mr. Paul Murphy: As I indicated in the answer I gave on 6 December 1999, Official Report, column 370W, the term 'research' covers a wide range of activities. The information requested is not held centrally by my Department and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kosovo

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent estimate of the number of Serbs who have been ethnically cleansed from Kosovo since June 1999. [107483]

Mr. Vaz: Protection of the Kosovo Serbs and other minorities is a top priority for KFOR and UNMIK. KFOR devotes around half of its resources at present to maintaining a presence in minority areas. In the UK-led sector, there are KFOR soldiers present in Serb towns and villages, as well as soldiers deployed to protect individual homes and farms. KFOR conducts patrols and escorts individuals to school and to work. In September 1999 UNMIK and Mr. Kouchner estimated 97,000 Serbs remain in Kosovo from a pre-war population of around 200,000. Since then there have been population movements in both directions of similar size.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on KLA involvement in terrorism and drug running. [107523]

Mr. Vaz: The KLA was demilitarised in September 1999 in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 1244 and has ceased to exist. The UN Mission in Kosovo and the NATO-led Kosovo force monitor individuals and armed groups for any illegal activity and pay particular attention to tackling violence and drug trafficking.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current strength of and support for the KLA in Kosovo. [107524]

Mr. Vaz: The KLA was demilitarised in September 1999, in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 1244 and has ceased to exist. Recent opinion polls indicate that the PPDK (Democratic Progress Party of Kosovo), the political party formed by the former commander of the KLA, Hashism Thaqi, has about 29 per cent. support and its leader about 15 per cent. We are committed to early democratic elections in Kosovo.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the levels of (a) rape, (b) murder, (c) torture and (d) intimidation of Serb civilians in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [107525]

Mr. Vaz: There were 430 reported murders and 180 kidnappings in Kosovo in the period between KFOR's deployment there on 12 June and 25 December last year. We do not have a breakdown of these figures by ethnic origin but of the 383 murders reported up to mid-November, 139 were Serbs, 145 Albanians and 99 of unknown ethnic origin. UNMIK and KFOR are putting substantial resources into protecting ethnic minorities. Currently over 50 per cent. of KFOR troops are on minority protection duties, providing a permanent presence in Serb towns, villages, neighbourhoods and individual houses. KFOR's presence has resulted in a significant reduction in the number of reported major offences from over 300 in the last week of June to fewer than 50 in the last week of November. There are no figures available for the other crimes.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British soldiers are involved in full-time protection of Serb civilians in Pristina from attacks by Albanians. [107522]

Mr. Vaz: Some 3,500 British soldiers are deployed with KFOR in Kosovo, of whom some 2,300 are serving in Pristina. KFOR currently devotes about half of its resources to protecting Serbs and other minorities.

Visitor Visas

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are taking place with the Home Office regarding the restarting of the appeals against refusal of visitors visas. [107353]

Mr. Vaz: Discussions are taking place with the Home Office about the proposed new appeal right for family visitors, with a view to implementation later this year.

Colonel Gaddafi

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by the Government to Mr. Prodi on his decision to invite Colonel Gaddafi to visit Brussels; and if he was aware of the proposal to invite Colonel Gaddafi to visit Brussels before it was made. [107367]

Mr. Vaz: The questions of a visit to Brussels came up in an unscheduled telephone conversation between Prodi and Gaddafi in December. We were not informed in advance of this conversation and no formal invitation was made. Following a Libyan suggestion in January that Gaddafi was to make a visit, we made clear to the Commission that such a visit would be premature until Libya had confirmed that it accepted the Barcelona Declaration and the acquis of the Barcelona Process unconditionally and in full. A visit to Brussels could only then be considered.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the extension of co-decision as it relates to the Intergovernmental Conference discussions. [107363]

Mr. Vaz: We will shortly publish a White Paper covering all aspects of institutional reform. This will set out our position on the possible extension of the codecision procedure.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Portuguese Presidency regarding an extension of the agenda for the forthcoming Intergovernmental Conference. [107358]

Mr. Vaz: We are in regular contact with the Portuguese Presidency on all aspects of the IGC.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives of the Portuguese Presidency to discuss the Intergovernmental Conference. [107366]

Mr. Vaz: We are in regular contact with the Portuguese Presidency about the IGC. I will next meet my Portuguese counterpart, Sexias da Costa, on 8 February.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on the extension of the powers of the President of the European Commission. [107359]

Mr. Vaz: We will shortly publish a White Paper on the forthcoming Intergovernmental Conference. This will cover all aspects of the IGC, including the possibility of extending the powers of the President of the European Commission.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on extension of the provisions for flexibility in the Amsterdam Treaty. [107360]

Mr. Vaz: We will shortly publish a White Paper on all aspects of the forthcoming Intergovernmental Conference. This will set out our policy on flexibility.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will publish his White Paper on the Intergovernmental Conference. [107362]

Mr. Vaz: We intend to publish the White Paper in the week beginning 7 February.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 669, whether border controls, defence, taxation, social security, own resources and Treaty amendments represent a definitive list of issues in which he will not countenance an extension of qualified majority voting at the IGC. [107397]

Mr. Vaz: We have long made it clear that we will not support the extension of QMV to areas of key national interest. Border controls, defence, taxation, social security, own resources and Treaty change are examples of such areas.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the level of the blocking minority threshold for votes in the EU Council of Ministers. [107348]

Mr. Vaz: The threshold for a blocking minority has for many years been set at around 30 per cent. of the votes. The Government's view is that this sets about the right balance between ease with which legislation can be passed or blocked.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 670, what is his policy on extension of qualified majority voting to all areas which are currently the subject of dispute between Spain and the UK in respect of their application to Gibraltar. [107398]

Mr. Vaz: We have made it clear on a number of occasions that we will consider the extension of qualified majority voting on a case by case basis. Where it is in Britain's interests we will support it. But in key areas of national interest we shall insist on retaining unanimity.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the EU Treaties; and if he will make a statement. [107364]

Mr. Vaz: We believe that a Charter which sets out rights already enjoyed by EU citizens in a clear and accessible way will help to deepen and strengthen the culture of rights and responsibilities at all levels across the EU. We consider that these objectives can best be met if the Charter is drafted as a declaratory document, identifying and complementing existing legal instruments on fundamental rights. We do not therefore favour the Charter's incorporation into the Treaties.

EU Enlargement

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his counterpart in (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) the Czech Republic, (d) Estonia, (e) Slovenia and (f) Cyprus with respect to the accession negotiations, and the timetable for accession to the EU; and if he will make a statement. [107349]

Mr. Vaz: Whenever my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary meets his counterparts from Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Poland and Slovenia, he discusses accession negotiations with them. When he met them in December in the margins of the Helsinki European Council, he noted that their countries have been making good progress in their preparation for accession. He emphasised that the UK wants the applicant states to join the European Union as soon as they are able to meet the obligations of membership. It is too soon to say when this will be.

European Resolutions

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed (a) amendment 14 to resolution B5–0308/1999, (b) resolution A5–0058/1999 and (c) resolution B5–0327/1999 with representatives of the European Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [107368]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not held discussions with MEPs on these resolutions.

Counter-terrorism (USA)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) of 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 477W, if he will place in the Library a copy of the US Senate testimony on counter-terrorism to which he refers. [107830]

Mr. Battle: I placed a copy in the Libraries of the House today, Tuesday 1 February.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Commonwealth Institute's relationship with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office [108184]

Mr. Hain: The Commonwealth Institute ceased to be a Non-Departmental Public Body under the direction of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 31 December 1999. This was a Commonwealth Institute initiative. Its new status is that of an independent charity, in the form of a company limited by guarantee. I am arranging for copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the new body to be placed in the Library of the House.

Under the terms of its agreement with the Commonwealth Institute, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is investing £8.055 million in a severance package in 1999–2000 and 2000–01. The funding will restore and develop the building, support new programmes and provide the Institute with financial stability while its plans take effect.

This development means that the Imperial Institute Act 1925 and the Commonwealth Institute Act 1958 need to be repealed, and we shall be seeking that this be done as soon as possible.

I wish the Institute well as it becomes a pan-Commonwealth agency dedicated to promoting the Commonwealth.

GCHQ

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the compensation schemes for the 14 trade unionists dismissed from GCHQ. [108189]

Mr. Robin Cook: I can announce that I have today laid before Parliament the two schemes that will put into effect the compensation of the 14 former GCHQ employees for their loss of pension rights. Details of the two schemes will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make arrangements for the hon. Member for North Cornwall to visit GCHQ Morwenstow and receive a briefing on that station's purpose and performance. [107866]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ would be delighted to make arrangements for the hon. Member, as constituency MP, to visit its outstation at Morwenstow to receive an unclassified briefing and to meet members of staff there.

Details of the station's purpose and performance are classified. The hon. Member will be aware that, as part of GCHQ, the Morwenstow outstation is subject to the scrutiny of the Intelligence and Security Committee, the members of which have access to classified material concerning GCHQ and its outstations under the Intelligence Services Act 1994.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 20 December concerning a constituent. [107852]

Mr. Vaz: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 29 January about this case.

Beef Ban

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to discuss the French ban on United Kingdom beef with the French Foreign Minister. [107357]

Mr. Vaz: The European Commission began legal proceedings against France's illegal ban on British beef on 4 January. This is now a matter between the Commission and the French Government, though my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary maintains a regular dialogue with the French Foreign Minister, M. Hubert Vedrine, to discuss a range of bilateral issues, such as the beef ban.

PRIME MINISTER

EU Defence

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 537W, on European Defence, if he will place Mr. Liddle's speaking notes in the Library. [107052]

The Prime Minister: I am advised that Mr. Liddle used brief speaking notes. They are not a comprehensive record. It would therefore not be appropriate for them to be placed in the Library of the House.

British-Irish Council

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to seek the consent of other parties to the Agreement on the joint ministerial Committee of the British-Irish Council to publishing the names of those who attend meetings. [107125]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 472–73W.

European Integration

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister when he last had discussions with the Prime Minister of Portugal on European integration. [107504]

The Prime Minister: I last spoke to Prime Minister Guterres of Portugal at a private dinner in Lisbon on 7 January. We discussed a range of international and EU issues, in particular Portuguese Presidency priorities.

Colonel Gaddafi

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has made to the EU Commission on Mr. Prodi's official invitation to Colonel Gaddafi to visit Brussels. [107502]

The Prime Minister: Mr. Prodi has spoken to Colonel Gaddafi on the telephone about a possible visit, but has made it clear that the next step in the development of EU/Libya relations is for Libya to accept the Barcelona acquis without conditions. The United Kingdom has made the same point in discussion of this matter with Libya and EU Partners. The question of high level visits to Brussels could only then be considered.

Balkans

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action he is taking as a result of his conversations in London with the Prime Minister of Montenegro on (a) lifting sanctions against Serbia, (b) restoring river traffic on the Danube and (c) pollution caused by NATO military action. [107761]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 31 January 2000]: My meeting with President Djukanovic focused on the prospects for stability in the Balkans. I made clear Her Majesty's Government's support for President Djukanovic's programme of political and economic reform.

Privy Council (Judicial Committee)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister who appoints judges to serve on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. [107626]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 31 January 2000]: Only judges who are Privy Councillors may serve on the Judicial Committee and it is of course The Queen who appoints Privy Councillors on the recommendation of Her Ministers. The senior Law Lord decides which judges are invited to make up a particular Board of the Judicial Committee.

Russia

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister which United Kingdom Ministers have visited the Russian Federation since 1 May 1997; and for what purpose. [107627]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 31 January 2000]: Details of visits are as follows:

Month/year	Minister	Purpose
July 1997	Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs	Bilateral consultations
October 1997	Myself	Bilateral consultations
November 1997	Secretary of State for Defence	Bilateral consultations
March 1998	President of the Board of Trade	G8 Energy Ministerial
July 1998	Under-Secretary of State for International Development	Bilateral consultations/Know-How-Fund co-operation
July 1998	Minister for Science, Energy and Industry	Bilateral discussions/UK-Russia Science and Technology Committee
September 1998	Minister for Farming and the Food Industry, Lord Donoughue	'Britain: Window for Business' exhibition
September 1998	Minister for Trade	'Britain: Window for Business' exhibition
September 1998	Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Ms Quin)	Bilateral consultations
September 1998	Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Baroness Symons)	Bilateral consultations
March 1999	Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs	Bilateral consultations
September 1999	Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Hoon)	Bilateral consultations
October 1999	Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Clarke)	G8 Meeting of Justice and Interior Ministers

Social Exclusion

Mr. Field: To ask the Prime Minister what is the expected date of publication of the report on deprived areas by the Social Exclusion Unit's Policy Action Team. [108072]

The Prime Minister: The National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal will be published in the summer. In order to allow individuals and organisations as much opportunity as possible to contribute to its preparation, the Social Exclusion Unit will be publishing a consultation version of the strategy in the next few weeks, and then holding a wide range of consultation events and seminars around the country.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Videolinks

Mr. Key: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the companies which supply, provide and service secure videolink technology for use in British courts; and what arrangements are in place to prevent the interception of transmissions by third parties. [107871]

Jane Kennedy: Videolink technology is used occasionally in the Crown Court to enable witnesses to give evidence from abroad. The installation is arranged locally by the party whose witness is giving evidence in this way. No information is held centrally on the suppliers used or the arrangements put in place to prevent interception. A pilot is currently in place to provide a videolink between Strangeways Prison and the Crown Court in Manchester.

Departmental Targets

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made in relation to his Department's targets for increased efficiency in the Departmental Annual report. [108046]

Mr. Lock: The LCD's objectives and measurable efficiency and effectiveness targets are contained in a Public Service Agreement published in December 1998. Management systems put in place to monitor achievement of the targets commenced on 1 April 1999. Progress against each of the targets will be reported in the LCD Departmental Report 2000–01 to 2001–02 to be published in April 2000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Decisions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of claims in each of the last three years for (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) incapacity benefit; in each category, how many and what proportion of the total (i) were successful on the original application and (ii) resulted in an appeal; of those that were successful how many and what proportion of the total (1) were successful on appeal and (2) resulted in an appeal to the commissioners; and of those applications that resulted in an appeal to the Commissioners, how many and what proportion of the total were successful. [106671]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Entitlement to Incapacity Benefit is based on a person's incapacity provided they satisfy the National Insurance contribution conditions. An award of benefit is made from the outset if the contribution conditions are satisfied and there is acceptable medical evidence to support the claim. Subsequently, incapacity is assessed under the relevant medical test (either the Own Occupation Test (OOT) during the first 28 weeks of incapacity where the claimant has a recent work record or the All Work Test (AWT) after 28 weeks or from the start of the claim where the claimant has not recently worked). If the test is not satisfied, benefit is disallowed from that point.

The numbers of claims for Incapacity Benefit (IB), awards and decisions relating to application of the incapacity tests

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Claims received by BA	1,054,340	1,062,817	1,012,981	930,002
Disallowed at outset due to failing the contribution conditions	382,443	439,645	435,095	398,605
IB awards commencing in the period[1]	535,100	495,560	455,380	409,980

Disallowed following AWT	66,367	112,046	104,339	88,904
Disallowed—non-return of questionnaire	7,710	9,134	10,887	10,578
Disallowed—did not attend examination	2,416	6,652	7,069	8,687

[1] The sum of the IB awards and those disallowed at outset does not equal the number of IB claims, as this figure includes claims that are subsequently withdrawn and accident declarations (which are made in case a claim to benefit becomes necessary at a later date as a result of an industrial accident). It is not therefore possible to give proportional figures.
[2] Examinations performed includes Severe Disablement Allowance cases and cases where only National Insurance Credits are awarded.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state, for each of the last three years, and the present year to date, how many (a) applications for and (b) reviews of (i) disability living allowance, (ii) attendance allowance and (iii) incapacity benefit were (1) decided on paper and (2) decided after a medical examination; and how many in each category resulted in (x) continuation of benefit, (y) an increase in benefit and (z) withdrawal of benefit. [106685]

Mr. Bayley: Disability Living Allowance (DLA) is a non-contributory benefit available to severely disabled people aged under 65 on the basis of their care and mobility needs; Attendance Allowance (AA) is available to those over 65 with care needs.

Information on the use of medical examinations in determining entitlement is available only for applications for benefit, and is in the tables.

Incapacity Benefit is awarded on the basis of medical evidence at the outset of a claim, provided the contribution conditions are satisfied, and continues to be paid subject to satisfaction of incapacity tests.

There are two tests of incapacity, the Own Occupation Test (OOT), which applies for the first 28 weeks for people who had a regular occupation, and the All Work Test (AWT) which applies to all cases where incapacity lasts more than 28 weeks. The AWT may be reapplied periodically to ensure that the entitlement conditions continue to be met. Where, following the application of the relevant test, a person is found capable of work, the incapacity decision is reviewed and benefit will be disallowed. An unfavourable determination on incapacity is not made without the claimant being given the opportunity for a medical examination, except where they fail without good cause to respond to requests for information in relation to the All Work Test.

Unfavourable determinations may be challenged on appeal and, since September 1999, may be reconsidered and revised where the claimant requests this within a specified time limit (one month). The available information is in the table.

Benefits (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners he estimates will benefit from the minimum income guarantee uprating in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in the first year of its operation; and if he will make a statement. [107255]

Mr. Rooker: Based on the latest administrative data that the Department holds, it is estimated that over 2,000 pensioners in the constituency of Shrewsbury and Atcham, and some 7,000 pensioners in the county of Shropshire will benefit from this April's increase to the minimum income guarantee.

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred and quoted in thousands.

2. Pensioners are defined as where the claimant, and/or partner is aged 60 or over.

3. Sample size 5 per cent.

4. Figures for 1998 are allocated by matching the postcode against the 1998 version 1 of the Postcode Directory, and 1999 figures by matching the postcode against the 1999 version 1 of the Postcode Directory.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of severely disabled children aged three and four who will benefit financially from the provisions of the Welfare Reform Bill in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in the first year of its operation; and if he will make a statement. [107254]

Mr. Bayley: This information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

In 2001–02 we estimate that approximately 7,000 severely disabled children aged three or four in Great Britain will become entitled to the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance (DLA). If the proportion of gainers in the areas requested were in line with the proportion of all DLA recipients in these areas, about 10 children would qualify in Shrewsbury and Atcham and about 50 in Shropshire.

Automated Credit Transfer

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefit recipients have been paid twice as a result of recent errors in the automatic credit transfer system; how much was overpaid; what was the cost of the steps taken to recover the overpayment; how much has so far been repaid; and if he will make a statement. [107636]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefit payments is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 31 January 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked Peter Mathison to respond to your recent question asking how many benefit recipients have been paid twice as a result of recent errors in the automatic credit transfer system; how much was overpaid, what was the cost of the steps taken to recover the overpayment; how much has so far been repaid; and if he will make a statement. As he is unavailable due to annual leave I am replying.

A computer processing problem resulted in a batch of Income Support payments paid by Automated Credit Transfer being duplicated. 112,000 Income Support customers received duplicate payments amounting to £10.5m. The payments were made into customers' bank accounts on 18 January. The duplicate payments made represent a very small proportion of the total number of Income Support payments the Agency makes each year.

Our aim is to protect the public purse and seek recovery when able to do so. Steps have been taken to account separately for the recovery of these duplicate payments and the Benefits Agency's Central Recovery Group (CRG) were asked to co-ordinate the recovery. Customers were notified of the problem by letter on 24 January and given details of how to repay the duplicate payment. Letter were issued to 109,663 customers. Letters were not issued where we had been informed the customer has since died or where the amount paid was less than £5.

The Central Recovery Group has set up dedicated phone lines to receive phone calls from customers who needed to speak to somebody about how to pay the money back. Customers can also contact their local benefit offices for advise and guidance.

Although customers have been asked to make repayment to the Central Recovery Group, customers may chose to make repayment at their local office. Although no specific information has yet been collected, Central Recovery Group estimate that in the last two days they have already received about 28,000 replies. The 3,000 opened today contained £157,000 in repayments. The vast majority of callers have also indicated a willingness to repay. This indicates a positive outlook for recovery from customers.

No estimate is yet available as to the extra costs incurred in recovering the overpaid benefit.

I hope this is helpful.

Departmental Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 21 December 1999, Official Report, column 541W, on departmental research contracts, if he will place a copy of the standard research contract in use by his Department in the Library. [107096]

Mr. Rooker: A copy of the standard Department of Social Security research contract has been placed in the Library.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will issue guidance to local benefit offices concerning the manner in which winter fuel payments are to be processed. [107853]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) on 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 81W.

New Deal (Lone Parents)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether single parents with a degree qualification can qualify for the New Deal for Lone Parents. [107462]

Angela Eagle: All lone parents on Income Support are eligible to join the voluntary New Deal for Lone Parents.

Since October 1998, when the New Deal for Lone Parents was launched nationwide, over 104,000 lone parents have attended interviews, 89 per cent. of these have decided to participate and over 28,000 have obtained jobs.

Benefit Payment Methods

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 572W, on benefit payment methods, what assumptions about the number of people who will opt to have benefits paid directly into a bank account rather than at a post office underlay his forecast of annual savings; and if he will make a statement. [107786]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 333W.

Fraud Inquiry

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the cost of the inquiry was into organised benefit fraud by John Scampion. [108041]

Mr. Rooker: Funding of £85,000 was allocated to the review of organised fraud. The final costs of this exercise are not yet known.

Gardening Leave

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officials in his Department are on gardening leave. [108055]

Mr. Rooker: The terms and conditions of the Department do not include a provision for gardening leave. We would interpret the term as applying to staff who have no current assignment and are in receipt of full pay and are not required to attend for work. The Department currently has no staff whose absence falls within this interpretation.

CABINET OFFICE

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to reduce the number of non-departmental public bodies. [106731]

Mr. Stringer: The number of non-departmental public bodies has fallen by 6 per cent. since 1997 and now stands at 1,057. This information is published in Public Bodies 1999, copies of which are available from the Libraries of the House. The Government will continue to ensure that the number of non-departmental public bodies is monitored and kept under control.

Civil Service (Political Activities)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 394W, if she will review the operation of the Servants of the Crown (Parliamentary, European Parliamentary and Northern Ireland Assembly Candidature) Order 1987, to allow for an extension of the Civil Service grades who can take part in all political activities. [106324]

Mr. Stringer: Consideration is being given to a possible amendment to the Servants of the Crown (Parliamentary, European Parliamentary, National Assembly for Wales, New Northern Ireland Assembly and Scottish Parliament Candidature) Order 1999 to allow Departments greater flexibility in the definition of the "politically free" group.

HEALTH

Cosmetic Surgery

15. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the regulation of private cosmetic surgery. [106252]

Ms Stuart: We have received a number of representations about the need to regulate more effectively premises where cosmetic surgery and laser treatment for cosmetic purposes are provided.

We recognise that greater assurance for the public is needed about the safety and quality of the treatment being provided in this area. We therefore intend to introduce improved regulation of independent healthcare services, including premises where cosmetic surgery is performed, medical treatment is provided under anaesthesia or sedation, and where certain laser treatment is provided. These measures are included in the provisions of our Care Standards Bill. Our aim is to achieve more effective regulation to assure the quality of private cosmetic surgery, the adequacy of information for patients and would-be patients, the safety of the technology and equipment used, including laser treatment, and the effectiveness of complaints procedures when things do go wrong. We are confident that this will provide the enhanced safeguards and assurance of standards in private cosmetic surgery.

Beta Interferon

16. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to publish its guidance on the use of beta interferon in the treatment of multiple sclerosis. [106253]

Mr. Denham: The work programme for the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) was announced on 4 November 1999. The timing of the appraisal is a matter for NICE to determine subject to wider discussion with stakeholders. I understand the results of NICE's deliberations on beta interferon will be available in late summer this year.

Ovarian Cancer

18. Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department provides for ovarian cancer research. [106255]

Yvette Cooper: The Government spent approximately over £1 million in 1998–99 on directly commissioned research projects relating to ovarian cancer.

The Department also supports research in the National Health Service funded by research councils and charities. It is estimated that over £1 million of this is supporting ovarian cancer research.

The Medical Research Council has been working with a number of cancer charities to set up a major study of screening on ovarian cancer. An announcement will be made shortly.

NHS Direct

19. Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of NHS Direct in meeting patient needs. [106256]

Ms Stuart: NHS Direct has proved to be very effective in meeting patients' needs. Sheffield University's independent interim evaluation of the first three NHS Direct pilot sites found that overall 97 per cent. of callers surveyed were either satisfied or very satisfied with the service they received. Out of those callers triaged by a nurse, nurses advise two out of three callers to a more appropriate setting of care than the caller said they would otherwise have used.

26. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact to date on access to health care of the NHS Direct service. [106263]

Ms Stuart: NHS Direct is improving access to health care by advising callers which part of the NHS to contact. NHS Direct nurses advise two out of three callers to use a more appropriate setting of care than the caller said they would otherwise have used. One in three callers are advised how to look after themselves at home. Over the holiday period, NHS Direct handled over 200,000 calls: if NHS Direct had not been available, many of these callers would have contacted other NHS services, including accident and emergency departments and the ambulance services at a time when these services were very hard pressed.

Cancer Services

20. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the programme to ensure that patients with cancer do not have to wait to see a specialist. [106257]

Yvette Cooper: We are ending long waits for outpatient appointments. By the end of 2000 we will have put the necessary arrangements in place to enable patients with suspected cancer referred urgently by their GP to be seen by a specialist within two weeks.

Vibration White Finger

21. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of vibration white finger treated by the NHS in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [106258]

Mr. Denham: The incidence of vibration white finger (VWF) treated by the National Health Service is not recorded. Hospital admissions for VWF will be included in those people having 'cervical sympathectomy', the surgical procedure to treat it. These figures were:

1993: 391
1994: 379
1995: 467
1996: 487
1997: 301.

Recent research by the Medical Research Council estimates that 242,000 adults in Britain suffer from cold-induced finger blanching as a result of exposure to hand-arm vibration at work.

Flu Outbreak

22. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the impact of the recent flu outbreak on the NHS. [106259]

Yvette Cooper: The incidence of flu, along with other acute respiratory illness, has put very real pressure on NHS services this winter, but the NHS is dealing with these pressures. The peaks in demand are being managed better than previously, with NHS staff—in both primary care and the hospitals sector—working well to manage the current pressures.

Waiting Times (Operations)

23. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in waiting times for hospital operations in the last three months. [106260]

Mr. Denham: Waiting times fell in the last three months for which data are available. Since August 1999 the average length of time patients were waiting for inpatient treatment has fallen from about 13 weeks to about 12 weeks in November 1999.

A and E Departments

24. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making in improving hospitals accident and emergency departments. [106261]

Ms Stuart: Last year, we announced a £115 million programme to modernise and upgrade all accident and emergency departments which needed it. Of the 244 schemes planned, over a quarter (27.5 per cent.) have now been completed. About half of the schemes will be finished by April, and some 80 per cent. by July.

Lichfield Victoria and Hammerwich Hospitals

25. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future provision of services currently available at the Lichfield Victoria Hospital and the Hammerwich Hospital in South Staffordshire. [106262]

Yvette Cooper: The hon. Member will be aware that South Staffordshire Health Authority is currently undertaking a wide ranging strategic review of services. I understand that the Health Authority is still working-up proposals, and as such it would not be possible for me to comment at this time on the future provision of services at Lichfield Victoria Hospital and the Hammerwich Hospital.

Primary Care Groups

27. Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making with the development of primary care groups. [106264]

Mr. Denham: 481 Primary Care Groups began on 1 April 1999 and are making excellent progress in bringing GPs, nurses, health professionals and social services together to deliver better services for their local population. 68 Primary Care Groups have also made applications to gain Primary Care Trust status this year and I have recently announced the first 17 to start from 1 April 2000.

Dementia

28. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to develop services for people suffering from dementia. [106265]

Mr. Hutton: Improving mental health services in the National Health Service is a priority for this Government. The Department also works closely with organisations such as the Alzheimer's Society, Dementia Relief Trust and the Dementia Services Development Centres who provide advice and support to users, their carers and those developing local services.

The work for the National Service Framework for Older People covers mental health including dementia. We expect to be publishing the National Service Framework later this year.

Nurses (Recruitment and Retention)

29. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to increase the recruitment and retention of nurses. [106266]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to help the National Health Service recruit the extra nurses it needs to deliver modern and dependable care.

Last month (January), we announced an above inflation pay award of 3.4 per cent. for all nurses, with additional increases for experienced staff nurses of 7.8 per cent.

As a result of last year's national recruitment campaign, over 5,000 nurses are returning to the NHS, and applications for nursing degree courses are up by 24 per cent.

I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that we will be launching this year's national recruitment campaign on 28 February. The campaign will include high profile TV and press advertising, and will target those areas of the country with the most pressing vacancies.

The Government are also making progress on modernising services and modernising employment practice in the NHS to retain nurses. Through our national nursing strategy, "Making a Difference", the NHS is developing flexible and family friendly working practices; extending and improving investment in lifelong learning and professional development, and tackling violence and racism in the workplace.

General Practitioners

30. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that GPs receive continuing professional development. [106267]

Mr. Denham: Continuing professional development (CPD) in general practice is important. Learning must be lifelong and cannot cease at the end of formal training. To provide the best possible service to their patients general practitioners should keep up to date with advances in patient care and continually review and improve their knowledge, skills and abilities. We will be issuing a paper on CPD in primary care, building on the many examples of good work already being done by GPs and extending these principles to all primary care staff.

Out-of-area Treatment

31. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding the operation of the out-of-area treatment scheme. [106268]

Mr. Denham: Extra Contractual Referrals (ECRs) were part of the unfair "two tier" internal market, and were abolished on 31 March 1999. They have been replaced by new arrangements for commissioning services—long term service agreements, specialised service agreements and out-of-area treatments.

Following the introduction of the new commissioning arrangements on 1 April 1999, the National Health Service Executive has received a small number of representations regarding the out-of-area treatment scheme. We are, of course, keeping the arrangements under review.

35. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the target time set by his Department within which a trust should receive payment for treatments given under the out-of-area treatment scheme. [106272]

Mr. Denham: Under the Out-of-area treatment (OAT) arrangements, each National Health Service trust has a main commissioner. The main commissioner health authority is funded for OATs through an annual non-recurrent adjustment to allocations. NHS trusts should be paid by their main commissioners in line with the profile agreed locally.

NHS Spending

32. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what total spending in the NHS will be in the current financial year; and what estimate he has made of the level in (a) 2006 and (b) 2007. [106269]

Mr. Denham: In 1999–2000 total gross National Health Service expenditure in England is forecast to be £43,049 million.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in the House on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 835–42, if we continue to manage the economy properly we will be able to sustain increases in the National Health Service funding which will bring us up to the European average.

Eye Tests

33. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the take-up of free eye tests for pensioners and the results of such tests. [106270]

Mr. Hutton: Since April 1999, when we extended eligibility for National Health Service sight tests to everyone aged 60 or over, some 50,000 more people have been undergoing these tests each week. We estimate that some five per cent. of those tested are referred for investigation of suspected eye disease.

Health Spending

34. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increase in UK health spending would be required to raise it to the European Union average. [106271]

Mr. Denham: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in the House on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 835–42, if we continue to manage the economy properly we will be able to sustain increases in the National Health Service funding which will bring us up to the European average.

Midwifery (North Essex)

36. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide additional funds to the North Essex health authority to enable team midwifery groups to be provided throughout the authority's area. [106273]

Yvette Cooper: North Essex Health Authority is in the process of reviewing its maternity services strategy for the whole of its area, with key stakeholders and users. There will be no changes made to existing maternity services until this strategy has been agreed. Any proposed changes to existing provision will be the subject of a full and open consultation.

The 2000–01 unified allocation for North Essex Health Authority is £544.95 million, representing a cash increase of £34.15 million (6.68 per cent). It is for health authorities, in partnership with NHS trusts, primary care groups, local authorities and local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health and modernising services. The significant additional resources available will help them in this.

Head Lice

37. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS spends each year on drugs to treat head lice. [106274]

Mr. Denham: The net ingredient cost of prescription items dispensed in the community for the treatment of head lice in each of the past five years, for which information is available, was as follows:

Net ingredient cost of prescription items for head lice treatments (England)

Year	£000
1994	3,107.3
1995	4,785.3
1996	7,538.4
1997	8,165.9
1998	6,352.3

Data are not collected centrally for treatments dispensed in hospital.

Waiting Lists (Consultants)

38. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of consultants to discuss targets for reducing waiting lists. [106275]

Mr. Denham: Ministers in the Department regularly visit the health service and talk to consultants and other professionals on a wide range of topics, including waiting lists.

Southend and Thameside Community Care Trusts

39. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the merger of the Southend and Thameside Community Care Trusts. [106276]

Mr. Denham: Southend Community National Health Service Trust and Thameside Community NHS Trust will merge from 1 April 2000 following a period of statutory consultation which ended on 31 August 1999.

The benefits of merger of the two trusts are significant. Equity, efficiency and access to services should all be improved. Elimination of organisational barriers will provide a platform from which clinical services can be developed. Thus best practice can more easily and quickly be implemented in respect of integration of mental health and other services in community settings. Management should be better placed to liaise effectively with stakeholders within and outside the NHS. The new structure will also improve local flexibility to make future changes easier, as primary care groups and Primary Care Trusts mature and take on additional roles. In addition, savings from reduced management costs can be re-invested in direct patient care.

Meningitis

40. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in the immunisation programme using the new meningitis vaccine. [106277]

Yvette Cooper: The introduction of the new meningitis C vaccine is progressing very well. Immunisation for 15 to 17-year-olds is largely completed, babies have been receiving the vaccine since November and we are on target to offer the vaccine to everyone aged under 18 by the end of the year.

NICE

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [106250]

Mr. Denham: NICE will secure a more rapid uptake of cost-effective innovations, eliminate the lottery of care, and help the NHS deliver the best possible patient care with the resources available. NICE's initial work programme was announced in November. Interim guidance on Relenza has already been issued. Appraisal guidance on hip implants, extraction of wisdom teeth, taxanes for breast and ovarian cancer, coronary artery stents, and new diagnostic techniques for cervical cancer will follow over the next three months or so. The first compilation of general practitioner referral guidelines will be published in April.

Older Carers

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people aged over 65 years were acting as carers for relatives under the age of 50 in (a) 1998, (b) 1988 and (c) 1978; and what are the projected figures for 2008. [104509]

Mr. Hutton: The information is not available for the years nor the age groups requested.

The 1995 General Household Survey (GHS) indicates that there are around 1 million people in Great Britain who are aged 65 and over and acting as a carer. The number of carers aged over 65 who are caring for people of different age groups can not be estimated accurately, because of small sample sizes. However, the GHS found that less than 0.5 per cent. of the total population aged 16 or more, were aged 65 and over and caring for a relative aged under 65.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people aged over 65 years were acting as carers for relatives over the age of 70 years in (a) 1998, (b) 1988 and (c) 1978; and what is the projected figure for 2008. [104508]

Mr. Hutton: The information is not available for the years nor the age groups requested.

The 1995 General Household Survey (GHS) indicates that there are around 1 million people in Great Britain who are aged 65 and over and acting as a carer. The number of carers aged over 65 who are caring for people of different age groups cannot be estimated accurately, because of small sample sizes. However, a rough estimate would indicate that around 500,000 people aged 65 and over were caring for relatives aged 75 and over.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a list of intensive care beds in each NHS hospital in England and Wales on (a) 31 March 1999 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available. [104774]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 17 January 2000]: The information has been placed in the Library. Information for Wales is a matter for its Administration.

Blood Donors

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many blood donors there were in each NHS region broken down by blood type; and how much blood was donated in each of the last five years. [106932]

Mr. Denham: Information on the number of donors, their blood types, and on the number of donations, is collected by National Blood Authority blood centre rather than by National Health Service region.

The number of donors and their blood groups, and donations collected, are set out in the table for each blood centre in 1998–99, the last year for which figures are available. For each of the last five years, the donor and donation figures for England are given.

The figures on the number of donors registered over the five year period are variable because the National Blood Authority records were reviewed and updated before transfer to a new national computer system in 1998, to remove duplicate and obsolete entries.

Cerebral Palsy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has spent on research into cerebral palsy in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [107060]

Mr. Denham: The Government fund health and medical research in a number of ways.

The Medical Research Council (MRC)—which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base.

It is the main agency through which the Government support research on the causes and treatment of disease.

The Department funds research and development to support its work on policy development and evaluation in health and social care. The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy which is used to support research and development of relevance to the National Health Service in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme.

During 1998–99 the MRC spent £58 million on neurosciences and mental health research.

This research portfolio covers a wide range of areas in basic research that underpin the understanding of diseases and dysfunction of the brain, including cerebral palsy.

The national NHS research and development programme has funded a number of projects on cerebral palsy at a total cost of £619,579. Expenditure for this work over the last five years is as follows.

1995–96	40,314
1996–97	129,454
1997–98	129,454
1998–99	171,339
1999–2000	101,658

Management of much of the research supported by the NHS research and development levy is devolved and details of expenditure at project level are not held centrally by the Department. For example, the Department provides support funds to allow work funded by others such as the Research Councils and charities to be conducted within the NHS. Local research projects may also be funded through NHS regional offices. The total spend on cerebral palsy research will therefore be greater than that shown for the national NHS research and development programme above.

The Department also funds the National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit at Oxford, whose programme includes work on cerebral palsy.

Project details of work directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR). This is available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD-ROM and on the Internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR lists a considerable number of projects related to cerebral palsy.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent assessment he has made of the impact of private practice in the same NHS unit or specialty on the waiting list and waiting time for treatment; [107391]

(2) what action he has taken in relation to Recommendation 15 of the Health Committee report, "Public Expenditure on Health Services: Waiting Lists" (Session 1990/91: page xxiv); and if he will make a statement. [107392]

Ms Stuart: We have made no assessment of the impact of private practice on waiting lists and times for treatment in the same National Health Service unit or specialty.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish, for each of the next 12 months, the week in which he expects to announce the latest (a) in-patient waiting list figures and (b) out-patient waiting list figures. [107301]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 31 January 2000]: The in-patient waiting list statistics for the end of December 1999 and out-patient waiting times statistics for the third quarter of 1999–2000 will be published during the week commencing 14 February 2000. Publication dates for later months will be published, as usual, one month prior in the Office for National Statistics' "Updates".

NHS Consultants (Private Practice)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the average time spent on private practice by NHS consultants. [107390]

Ms Stuart: The vast majority of our consultants work hard for the National Health Service and more than fulfil their contractual commitments.

We are currently negotiating a new modern contract for consultants with the Central Consultants and Specialists Committee of the British Medical Association. We want to see better, more robust job planning arrangements, supported by regular appraisal, to ensure that consultants' undoubted energies are focused clearly on delivering key service goals and priorities, providing patients with the high quality care that they need and expect, increasing productivity where it is needed most and cutting waiting lists.

Private Finance Initiative (Hospitals)

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals planned to be built under the private finance initiative indicating how many projects have been completed. [107434]

Mr. Denham: A list of all 31 major private finance initiative schemes is in the table. It shows schemes that have reached financial close and work has started on site, and schemes that have been given the go-ahead and are working towards financial close. The first three major acute PFI schemes, at Carlisle, Dartford and Gravesham and South Buckinghamshire will become operational in 2000.

As PFI procures a service rather than the underlying asset, capital values shown are necessarily estimates.

Summary:

All schemes

Since 1 May 1997, 37 major hospital developments, worth over £3.1 billion have been given the go ahead.

PFI schemes

31 major hospital developments worth over £2.9 billion have been given approval to proceed under the Private Finance Initiative since 1 May 1997, 16 of which, worth almost £1.3 billion have already signed final contracts and begun building. Of these 16, three are scheduled to become operational in 2000.

Publicly funded schemes

The go ahead has also been given to six publicly funded schemes worth almost £220 million, with work on site already started at four of these.

Piped Oxygen

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports he has received on the benefits of having piped oxygen in acute wards in terms of patient care and nursing staff productivity. [107417]

Ms Stuart: No central reports are available on the benefits of having piped oxygen in acute wards in terms of patient care and nursing staff productivity. Experience shows that piped oxygen is beneficial in terms of improved patient care, providing a safe, cost effective and productive service.

NHS Hospitals (Training)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many doctors currently working in the private health sector were trained in NHS hospitals; [107432]

(2) how many people in professions allied to medicine currently working in the private health sector were trained in NHS hospitals; [107429]

(3) how many nurses currently working in the private health sector were trained in NHS hospitals. [107428]

Ms Stuart: Data on the source of health professionals qualifications working in the private sector are not collected centrally. However, the great majority of United Kingdom trained health professionals working in the private health sector will have received their professional education and training within or associated with the National Health Service.

Bio-medical Scientists

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bio-medical scientists are employed by the West Sussex Health Authority; and what is the Authority's establishment for bio-medical scientists. [107874]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is given in the table.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): all pathology scientists within West Sussex Health Authority, as at 30 September 1998

	Total pathology scientists
Whole-time equivalent	5
Numbers (headcount)	5

Notes:
1. "Pathology Scientists" include Biomedical Scientists, Immunologists, Clinical Cytogenetics, Chemical Pathologists, Haematologists etc.
2. "Pathology Scientists" can not be broken down in any more detail to reveal Biomedical Scientist numbers.

Breast Cancer

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women with suspected breast cancer waited to see a consultant for (a) two, (b) three, (c) four, (d) five, (e) six, (f) seven and (g) eight weeks in the most recent period for which figures are available; and if he will provide this information in respect of the age groups (i) under 29, (ii) 30 to 49, (iii) 50 to 64, (iv) 65 to 74, (v) 75 to 84 and (vi) 85 years and over. [105067]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. In the three months ending 30 September 1999, 95 per cent. of patients with suspected breast cancer were seen for their first outpatient appointment within two weeks of their GP deciding they should be referred urgently and the National Health Service trust receiving the referral within 24 hours.

Community Hospital (Lymington)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce a decision on the proposed private finance initiative scheme for a new community hospital for Lymington. [107264]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 31 January 2000]: Negotiations between Southampton Community Health Services National Health Service Trust and its private sector partner on the proposed private finance initiative scheme for a new community hospital for Lymington are continuing. We hope these will be completed shortly, allowing an announcement to be made shortly after.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Country of Origin Labelling

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking to curb misleading country of origin labelling on food products. [108318]

Mr. Nick Brown: Following consultation of the food industry and enforcement authorities I issued today revised guidance notes on origin labelling to ensure that consumers are not misled about the true origin of the food they buy. A copy of the guidance notes has been placed in the Library of both Houses.

Red Tape Review

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce his responses to the Red Tape Review reports on the Meat Industry, IACS and Inspections, and the Intervention System. [108319]

Mr. Nick Brown: Further to my replies of 13 December 1999, Official Report, column 89W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Dr. Naysmith), and to my hon. Friends the Members for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) and for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Mrs. Lawrence), 21 December 1999, Official Report, columns 572–73W, welcoming the three reports prepared as key parts of the review of regulatory burdens on agriculture, I am today placing in the Library of the House action plans which set out the Government's responses to the 107 recommendations in the reports. We have accepted 98 of the 107 recommendations. We shall be giving six recommendations further consideration, and will do so as rapidly as possible. Of the 98 recommendations we have accepted, we shall be pursuing 23 in Brussels to seek changes in the basic legal provisions.

Over-30-month Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the criteria by which the Intervention Board awards slaughter contracts under the over-30-month scheme. [102918]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 16 December 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 183W.

Asset Sales

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the items in the National Assets Register sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies since 15 February 1999, stating in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total amount raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [104479]

Mr. Morley: Some £16,744,388 has accrued to my Department, its agencies and associated non-departmental public bodies from sales of surplus assets disposed of since 15 February 1999.

A summary of individual assets and groups of assets sold or otherwise disposed of by my Department and its associated bodies since February 1999 is contained in the following tables. The table headings reflect the categories reported in the National Asset Register.

Categories where no disposals have taken place have been omitted.

More detailed information (such as types of computer, descriptions of individual vehicles) is held by the Department but would be expensive to compile.

Since the National Asset Register was published in November 1997, a total of £29,374,183 has been realised from disposals of such assets.

The Department remains committed to the early identification of surplus assets and their disposal on terms favourable to the public purse.

1. Property

The Ministry has disposed of the sites listed since 15 February 1999, and realised £14,450,100 to date. A further £1,850,000 is payable to MAFF in 2000–01 arising from these sales. Individual figures for each item are held by my Department but have not been reported here for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

A number of surplus properties remain. Action is in hand to dispose of these at best value to the Department.

[1] Where number of units are not stated, the information is available but due to changes in local accounting systems could only be retrieved at significant cost.

Notes:

As a consequence of technical obsolescence, IT disposals tend to have no resale value. The Department and its Agencies seek to maximise the use of existing technology where possible, and only dispose of IT equipment when it can no longer meet the Department's needs.

The Department has incurred some additional expense to dispose safely of PCBs and Monitors but this cost is not readily distinguishable from other expenditure on waste disposal.

5B. Information Technology—Main Systems

Version 9.3.7 of the "ORACLE Financials" Resource Accounting and Management Information System has been superseded by version 10.7. The earlier version has been retained for accessing archived data. PSD upgraded their SUN Accounts system in March 1999. Although there was no cash benefit from the disposal of the old system and associated equipment, the Agency received a trade-in value of £20,000 against the cost of the upgrade.

Some non-critical software systems were capitalised on MAFF and Agency Accounts where material external costs had been incurred. These had no residual value, were not Millennium compliant, and have been written off from the accounts.

Covent Garden Market Authority

No items have been sold since 15 February 1999, though plant and equipment with a book value of £3,069 was disposed of with no cash benefit.

Total sales since 1997 = £2,359.

Food from Britain

No assets have been disposed of since 15 February 1999.

Total sales since 1997 = £30,302

Horticulture Research International

No assets have been disposed of since 15 February 1999. There have been no sales receipts for registered assets since 1997.

Meat and Livestock Commission

Sales of surplus assets since 15 February 1999:

IT Equipment: £3,000

Vehicles: £122,000

Total Sales since 1997 = £474,000.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

The following items have been sold since 15 February 1999:

Office equipment: £1,478

IT Equipment: £251

Vehicles: £950

Disposals with no cash benefit—1 portacabin.

Total sales since 1997 = £15,988.

Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew

The following items have been sold since 15 February 1999:

Scientific and Laboratory Equipment: £1,170

Vehicles: £10,900

Total sales since 1997 = £24,326.

West Devon Meats

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to compensate farmers who incur extra transport costs as a result of the withdrawal of the contract with West Devon Meats to slaughter cattle under the over thirty months scheme. [101912]

Ms Quin [holding answer 13 December 1999]: There are no plans to provide such compensation. Neither was such compensation paid at the time of the previous tender. It is the responsibility of the producers to transport their Over Thirty Months Scheme (OTMS) animals from the farm to the point of slaughter. The Government's responsibility is to ensure that there is a sufficient number of access points into the scheme, and that they are well distributed having regard to the main production areas. The outcome of the tender for OTMS slaughtering services, together with the unchanged network of 170 markets registered to collect OTMS cattle (10 of which are in Devon), fully meet these requirements.

EU Leader Plus Programme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the United Kingdom's share of the EU Leader Plus programme; which member states receive more funding under the programme than the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [105663]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom's share of the EU Leader Plus Community Initiative is 106 million euro out of 2,020 million euro for the period 2000–06. The Member States receiving more funding than the United Kingdom are Germany, Greece, Spain, France, Italy and Portugal. The European Commission have said that allocations to Member States were based on allocations under previous programmes and objective criteria such as population in rural areas, utilised agricultural area and population density.

Sugar

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of ensuring that future arrangements provide a sufficient supply of imported raw sugar to maintain the basic level of cane refining. [105491]

Ms Quin: The UK attaches considerable importance to the maintenance of adequate raw sugar supplies to the cane refining industry, which produces about half of our sugar. We therefore need to keep this consideration firmly in mind in forthcoming discussions about the EU sugar regime, and preferential access for cane sugar.

Pig Sector

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the investigations of his meat trader adviser in respect of the pig sector; and when his findings will be published. [106865]

Ms Quin: The meat trade adviser is in contact with all the major British retail and catering groups and has had several useful meetings with key industry organisations on the issue of misleading labelling of pigmeat products. Progress is being made and labels are being changed. Although not produced in a form which can readily be published, the meat trade adviser's findings are made known as he discusses his progress regularly with the National Pig Association and other industry bodies.

New guidelines on less ambiguous country of origin labelling will shortly be issued to Trading Standards Officers by my Department's Food Labelling and Standards Division.

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in establishing a state aid scheme for the pig sector in agreement with the EU. [105139]

Ms Quin [holding answer 17 January 2000]: The European Commission has made clear in correspondence and at meetings that it will not sanction any scheme which fails to meet the rules. The rules preclude the payment of operating aids, i.e. subsidies that are simply aimed at improving the producer's position in the market. However, we continue to consider possible ways forward in consultation with industry representatives.

Regulation

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which interested organisations besides the NFU he has contacted concerning the level and costs of regulation affecting farming in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other member states in the last 12 months. [106868]

Ms Quin: The Department consults all interested organisations on regulatory proposals for which it is responsible as a matter of course. Further, a wide range of interested organisations responded to our open invitation to identify regulatory burdens on agriculture as part of the review launched in September 1999. The three Red Tape working groups we set up between them consulted over 300 organisations; the full lists of consultees are appended to their reports available in the Library of the House.

Consultation with organisations in other Member States is a matter for national authorities. However, we maintain regular contact with Commissioner Fischler and European ministerial colleagues.

New Forest Draghounds

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who has the authority to grant the New Forest Draghounds a licence to operate in the New Forest. [106993]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission has authority to grant licences for activities on the Crown Lands of the New Forest.

Press Releases

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press releases have been published by his Department since 1995. [106991]

Mr. Morley: The number of press releases published by MAFF since 1995 are as follows:

Year	Number
1995	540
1996	491
1997	467
1998	553
1999	571

Rodenticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to monitor the incidence of (a) rodenticide levels in higher food-chain wildlife and (b) resistance in rats to rodenticides; and if he will make a statement. [106661]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 January 2000]: The Wildlife Incidents Investigation Scheme collects reports of wildlife deaths that may have been caused by rodenticides or other pesticides. All incidents accepted into the Scheme are investigated and the pesticide involved, if any, identified. The results of investigations may be used in a review of the pesticide approval and in enforcement action. In 1998, 49 cases were found to involve anticoagulant rodenticides.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' latest English House Condition Survey, published on 5 January, showed generally low levels of rodent infestation. Separate work carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on levels of resistance to anticoagulant rodenticides in rats on farms showed that there is not a general problem.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food also carries out research to identify issues affecting the development and spread of resistance and the risk to non-target wildlife species arising from the use of rodenticides.

Departmental Employment

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are employed by his Department; and what was the equivalent figure five years ago. [106989]

Mr. Morley: On 1 October 1994, there were 10,793 staff working in my Department and its agencies.

On 1 October 1999 (the latest information available) there were 9,782 staff working in MAFF and its agencies undertaking broadly comparable functions. In addition, there are 1,482 staff working for the Meat Hygiene Service who undertake functions which were the responsibility of local authorities in 1994. These figures are expressed in Full Time Equivalent terms. (Total = 11,264 staff).

Intervention Board

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has received the PricewaterhouseCoopers' report which includes a review of the Agricultural Intervention Board; and if he will make a statement; [107044]

(2) when he plans to announce his decision on the future of the Agricultural Intervention Board. [107045]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister has received PricewaterhouseCoopers' report on CAP Scheme Administration in England.

The report considers the current arrangements for administration of CAP schemes against the background of the Modernising Government agenda, and focuses in particular on the scope for improving service delivery to claimants and making best use of IT developments. It recommends that the CAP scheme payment functions of MAFF in England and of the Intervention Board in the UK should be merged to create a new CAP administration organisation supported by a single state of the art IT system.

My right hon. Friend is now considering these recommendations. Any radical reorganisation of CAP administration will be considered in the context of the Spending Review 2000. Decisions on the future of the Intervention Board will be taken in conjunction with the devolved administrations, since the Board reports to Agriculture Ministers in all four parts of the United Kingdom.

Farming (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much Government funding was given to farmers in Shropshire in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999; and if he will make a statement. [107167]

Ms Quin: Total subsidies paid to farmers in Shropshire by MAFF during 1998 amounted to £43,588,045. These include national and EU funding. Farmers also benefit from expenditure on market support measures, although this is not paid directly to them.

Figures for 1999 are not yet available.

Pigmeat

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are introduced on imported pigmeat which is processed and sold in pre-packed form. [107107]

Ms Quin: All meat and meat products, including processed and pre-packed pigmeat, imported from third countries are subject to veterinary inspection at designated Border Inspection Posts. All consignments are subject to documentary and identity checks and at least 20 per cent. of consignments are subject to physical checks. These checks are to ensure that conditions of import have been complied with and that the products have remained in a satisfactory condition during transport.

Meat and meat products originating in all EU member states, including the UK, are subject to strict hygiene rules laid down in EU law. Among other things, this sets out the licensing, structural and supervision requirements to be applied in all meat plants before they can be approved for trade with other member states. Member states to which meat and meat products may be dispatched are permitted to carry out random checks at destination but these are limited by virtue of the fact that there are no certification or pre-notification requirements for most consignments.

Ensuring that all member states comply with their Community obligations in properly implementing and applying EU hygiene rules is the responsibility of the European Commission, whose Food and Veterinary Office carries out regular programmes of inspection visits to all member states. Their reports are considered by the Standing Veterinary Committee in Brussels, and, if necessary, the Commission will take infraction proceedings against member states whose arrangements are considered inadequate.

Forestry

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what acreage of forestry land is under cultivation in the United Kingdom. [107292]

Mr. Morley: There are 2.66 million hectares of woodland in the United Kingdom.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the way in which his Department communicates with the Agricultural Section of the National Assembly for Wales, with regard to information emanating from the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [107230]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 January 2000]: This Department is committed to providing all the devolved administrations with full and comprehensive details, as early as possible, of all developments and initiatives within the framework of the European Union which may be relevant to them. The devolved administrations are also committed to informing this Department of any direct approaches they receive from the Commission on new policy initiatives. These arrangements are reflected in the draft bilateral Concordat between MAFF and the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales. Similar working arrangements were in place between officials in MAFF and the Welsh Office Agriculture Department before devolution. If a need to revise the practices is identified and agreed, the Concordat can be amended at any time.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the effect on stocks of cod of the cut in the North Sea quota. [107476]

Mr. Morley: The total allowable catch (TAC) of 81,000 tonnes agreed for 2,000 takes account of scientific advice from the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES) that the stock is currently outside safe biological limits and that fishing mortality should be reduced to prevent further decline in the Spawning Stock Biomass (SSB) in the short term. The ICES advice indicates that the maximum catch limit agreed provides a high probability that the SSB will increase to above the precautionary reference level of 150,000 tonnes over the next few years.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the effect on stocks of coley of the quota cuts of the last five years. [107475]

Mr. Morley: The table shows the total allowable catches (TACs) for North Sea and West of Scotland saithe (coley) over the last five years.

Tonnes

	North Sea	West of Scotland
1996	111,000	13,000
1997	115,000	12,000
1998	97,000	10,900
1999	110,000	7,500
2000	85,000	7,000

It can be seen that the North Sea TAC has moved up and down, while the West of Scotland TAC has steadily declined, reflecting scientific advice from the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea on the state of the stock. The reductions agreed for 2000 take account of advice from ICES that the combined saithe stock is outside safe biological limits and that fishing mortality should be reduced to prevent further decline in the Spawning Stock Biomass (SSB) in the short term. The reduced TACs will help ensure that the SSB increases to more sustainable levels over the medium term.

Fisheries Aid

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact the cut in fisheries grant-in-aid in West Sussex will have on sea trout runs in the Western Rother, Arun and Adur rivers. [107873]

Mr. Morley: It is for the Environment Agency to determine its spending priorities for 2001–02 in the light of the planned £1.5 million reduction in Grant-in-Aid in England. It is not possible for me to predict how the cut is likely to affect sea trout runs in the West Sussex area.

TREASURY

Official Visits

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his visit to Rome in October 1997 was an official visit; and what consequent declaration he made relating to gifts and hospitality to his Permanent Secretary. [107637]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 31 January 2000]: I travelled to Rome in October 1997—at no cost to public funds—both for a private visit and to meet the Italian Finance Minister, Mr. Carlo Ciampi. In line with the requirements of the Ministerial Code no declaration to the Permanent Secretary was necessary.

Child Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield from tapering away child benefit in the hands of the highest earner in a couple according to the thresholds and tapering mechanism envisaged for child tax credits. [103146]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have introduced child tax credits in the WFTC and will introduce a separate children's tax credit from April 2001. The two credits have very different withdrawal mechanisms and without a clearer guide as to which should be applied it is not possible to answer the question.

VAT (Labour-intensive Industry)

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans to apply the EU proposal to offer VAT relief to labour intensive industries in the UK with special reference to the equestrian industry. [107389]

Dawn Primarolo: The EC Directive which provides for an optional, experimental, reduced rate of VAT applies only to a narrow range of labour intensive services. The Chancellor has no plans for its application to the equestrian industry.

Working Families Tax Credit

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of lowering the working-hours requirement for receipt of the working families tax credit from 16 hours to 10 hours for parents who have at least one child aged under five years for (a) both parents and (b) one parent. [107404]

Dawn Primarolo: Reliable estimates for the cost of lowering the working hours requirement for receipt of the Working Families' Tax Credit from 16 hours to 10 hours for parents with at least one child aged under five years are not available.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with other EU countries on the problem of tobacco smuggling in Europe. [107497]

Dawn Primarolo: The problems of tax fraud and international criminality, including tobacco smuggling, are matters regularly included in discussions which I and other members of the Government have with counterparts in other EU member states. These are underpinned by frequent operational and other contacts between officials in both the UK and other member states, together with the Anti-Fraud Unit of the European Commission.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent reports he has received on the extent of (a) Mafia and (b) other criminal organisations' involvement in tobacco smuggling in Europe and on the centres of control and operation. [107499]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers receive regular reports on tax fraud activity affecting a variety of sectors including tobacco. Some of this information is in the form of confidential and operationally sensitive advice, some is contained in published documents. A recent document in the latter category is the 1998 European Commission "Annual Report on the Fight Against Fraud" published on 19 November 1999, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Income Tax Revenue

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much income tax revenue was derived from income in excess of (a) £35,000, (b) £50,000, (c) £75,000, and (d) £100,000 in the last financial year. [107394]

Dawn Primarolo: The amounts of income tax liable from people with total incomes in excess of £35,000, £50,000, £75,000 and £100,000 in 1998–99 are £36.6 billion, £27.3 billion, £19.2 billion and £15.1 billion respectively.

These estimates are based on the 1997–98 survey of personal incomes projected to 1998–99 consistent with November 1999 Pre-Budget Report assumptions.

Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much income tax revenue derived from (a) lower rate receipts, (b) basic rate receipts and (c) higher rate receipts in the last financial year. [107393]

Dawn Primarolo: In 1998–99, total income tax liabilities are estimated to be around £89 billion before allowances given as tax deductions at a fixed rate (such as the married couples allowance) and £85.5 billion after these allowances. Lower rate, basic rate and higher rate liabilities, before the aforementioned allowances are estimated to be £22.8 billion, £41.0 billion and £25.3 billion respectively.

These estimates are based on the 1997–98 survey of personal incomes projected to 1999–2000 consistent with November 1999 Pre-Budget Report assumptions.

Dwellings (VAT)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available (a) the numbers of dwellings upon which repairs were carried out occasioning a VAT payment, (b) the yield from such payments in each year and (c) the average value of the work carried out. [107754]

Dawn Primarolo: Statistics on dwellings on which repairs have been carried out and on the VAT relating to such repairs are not directly available.

Based on data published in Housing and Construction Statistics 1988–98, VAT charged in 1998 in respect of repairs, maintenance and improvements carried out by contractors on private sector housing in Great Britain is estimated at £1.7 billion. It is not possible to identify repairs separately.

Fees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which fees his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies collect; how much has been raised and will be raised from each of these fees from 1989–90 to 2004–05; and which of these fees count as negative expenditure. [107976]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 265W.

VAT

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what legal advice he has received on reducing VAT on repairs to historic buildings. [107926]

Dawn Primarolo: EC law does not permit a reduced rate of VAT for repairs to historic buildings. A recent Directive made provision for a short term experimental reduced rate for renovation and repairs of private housing, which could therefore cover some historic buildings.

Departmental Accommodation

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for each of the Treasury buildings in London, how many rooms are set aside for (a) ethnic minority religious use, (b) pregnant women and (c) smokers. [107529]

Miss Melanie Johnson: (a) None.

(b) Pregnant women have use of two rooms in the Parliament Street office and one room at Allington Towers.

(c) Smoking is largely restricted to dedicated ventilated smoking room (four smoking rooms in Parliament and three smoking rooms at Allington Towers) and is not permitted in common areas, with the exception of an area of the Staff Restaurant.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1999, Official Report, column 300W, on research contracts, if he will state the total expenditure on research let by his Department since May 1997 and list the titles of all research contracts let by his Department during 1999 and costing £20,000 or more, stating the value of each contract, and in each case whether the contract included (i) departmental veto over publication of the research results, (ii) departmental control over the date of publication of the research and (iii) a requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments; and if he will place a copy of the standard research contract currently in use by his Department in the Library. [107037]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 16 December 1999, Official Report, column 300W.

Invest to Save

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have for a successor programme to Invest to Save. [108047]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The future of the Invest to Save Budget (ISB) will be considered in the 2000 Spending Review and decisions announced as part of the Government's spending plans for the period 2001–02 to 2003–04.

DEFENCE

A400M Project

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the UK-based companies with potential to benefit from contracts if the Airbus Military Company's A400M proposals are accepted by his Department; and if he will estimate how many jobs the project would create in the United Kingdom. [104420]

Dr. Moonie: BAE Systems, as one of the Airbus partners, would expect to play a significant role in the A400M programme if the Government were to select this aircraft as a solution to the RAF's Future Transport Aircraft (FTA) requirement. Beyond that, there is potentially large scope for UK aerospace suppliers to participate in the A400M programme. However, it would not be possible for me to list specific companies at this stage as the selection of suppliers would be properly a matter for the commercial judgment of Airbus Military (as Prime Contractor) during the aircraft development programme.

We are taking account of employment forecasts for competing options for the FTA requirement. As the Minister for Competitiveness advised the hon. Gentleman, Official Report, 15 December 1999, column 208W, the FTA competition is as yet undecided and it would be inappropriate to publish information supplied by companies. I must therefore withhold commercially sensitive information under Exemption 13 (third party's commercial confidences) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

ASTOR System

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which UK-based companies will be contributing towards development of the Raytheon ASTOR system. [104408]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 February 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the ASTOR programme. This matter falls to me to answer within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Over 80 UK based companies will be involved in the ASTOR programme. The major companies being Raytheon Systems Limited (UK), BAe Systems, Short Brothers, Motorola UK, Marshall SV, Matra Marconi, Ultra, and Rolls Royce.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long he expects the new Raytheon ASTOR system to be in service with the RAF. [104400]

Dr. Moonie: We expect the new Raytheon ASTOR system to be in service about 30 years.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects (a) the final delivery of the Raytheon ASTOR system to be made to the RAF and (b) the system to be in service. [104401]

Dr. Moonie: I expect delivery of the final Airborne Stand-Off Radar (ASTOR) air platform to be delivered in 2007, and the system's In-Service Date to be 2005.

Post Offices

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals are currently being considered by his Department to help to sustain and develop the viability of rural and urban sub post offices. [105906]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given him on 20 January 2000, Official Report, columns 519–20W, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Competitiveness.

Hagglunds BV206 Vehicles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the Hagglunds BV206 vehicles being delivered to the Royal Marines. [106151]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 February 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the cost of the Hagglunds BV206 vehicles being delivered to the Royal Marines. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The Hagglunds BV206 vehicle has been in service with the Royal Marines for over ten years and no new vehicles of this type are being procured. However, the Defence Procurement Agency is currently in contract negotiations with Hagglunds for the procurement of an All Terrain Vehicle (Protected), known as (ATV(P)), for the Royal Marines. Once accepted into service, this vehicle will provide a protected manoeuvre capability additional to that of the BV206 vehicles. Since the price is still under negotiation, I am withholding information on the cost of this project in accordance with Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to effective management and operations of the public service.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of installing the UK/VSC 501 satellite system on the Hagglunds BV206 vehicles being delivered to the Royal Marines. [106153]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 February 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the cost to the Ministry of Defence of installing the UK/VSC 501 satellite system on the Hagglunds BV206 vehicles being delivered to the Royal Marines. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The total procurement cost for the two UK/VSC 501 satellite communications terminals, each of which were installed in a MOD owned Hagglunds BV206, was just under £3.2m. This cost includes the procurement of spares, training, documentation and supporting infrastructure. The vehicles were delivered to the Royal Marines last April.

Jaguar Reconnaissance Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of equipping the SEPECAT Jaguar reconnaissance aircraft with the Vicon 18 Series 601 GP (1) electro-optic pods; and how many aircraft will be fitted with the pods. [106155]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 February 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the cost of equipping the SEPECAT Jaguar reconnaissance aircraft with the Vicon 18 Series 601 GP(1) electro-optics pods, and how many aircraft will be fitted with the pods. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The cost of equipping the Jaguar GR3a reconnaissance aircraft with the Vicon 18 Series 601 GP(1) electro-optics pod is expected to be £19.2m. This covers the provision of 14 pods, 4 Ground Imagery Exploitation Systems, the integration of the pods onto the aircraft, clearance activities and project support.

The 14 pods will be capable of being fitted to any single seat Jaguar GR3a aircraft.

Type-45s

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what were the reasons which underlay his decision not to limit the equipment and systems for the Type 45 to the three former common new generation frigates partner contractors; and if he will make a statement; [107040]

(2) who will have control of the equipment selection for the new Type 45 warship; and if he will make a statement; [107041]

(3) what were the reasons involving the Horizon Programme which underlay the decision not to use a single prime contractor; and if he will make a statement. [107043]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 February 2000:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Type 45 destroyer and Horizon frigate programmes. These matters fall to me to answer within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

We did not limit equipment and systems for the Type 45 to the three "CNGF" former partner contractors because there were elements in their design that were superfluous to UK requirements. For example, as I said in evidence to the House of Commons Defence Committee on 16 June 1999, the unit production cost of an electronic warfare system for a national warship is planned to be about one third of that envisaged for the Horizon frigate.

Nevertheless, as a consequence of GEC (Marconi)'s membership of the now disbanded Horizon International Joint Venture Company, BAE SYSTEMS is able to make maximum use of the work accomplished during the Horizon design definition phase and, as I said in my letter dated 10 January 2000, have indicated that they will make use of some 70% of the work done for the Horizon programme. It will be for BAE SYSTEMS, as the Prime Contractor for the Type 45 programme, to make many of the decisions on equipment selection for the Type 45. However, the Company will be required to demonstrate value for money through competitive procurement of equipment and systems for the ship and to show that the equipment selected provides the required capability. This will take account of competitions already undertaken for Horizon equipment whilst moving forward with the national programme at an affordable cost.

With regard to your question concerning the continuing industrial difficulties with the Horizon Programme which underlay the decision not to use a single prime contractor, the information requested was given in the supplementary memorandum submitted by the MoD to the House of Commons Defence Committee (HCDC), Session 1998/99:

"The key difficulty in forming an effective industrial organisation centred on the selection of a Prime Contractor able to direct its subcontractors to the extent required to manage the overall risk. In essence, the very wide range of companies involved could not agree on one of them becoming an effective leader. This prevented the nomination of an empowered prime contractor taking full responsibility for the project, which is fundamental to best procurement principles." (HCDC's eighth report, session 1998/99 (page 54).

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military assistance he has given to the Sri Lankan Government during the last two years. [108014]

Mr. Spellar: During the period 1 January 1998 to 31 January 2000 personnel from my Department have provided the following military assistance to the Sri Lankan Government:

Assistance to the Sri Lankan Army in the setting up of a Command and Staff College and on syllabus development and training.

Advice to the Sri Lankan Joint Operations Bureau on the concept and organisation of Joint Forces and Joint Service formations.

Training and advice to the Sri Lankan Army Medical Corps on battlefield life saving measures.

Advice to the Sri Lankan military on explosives ordnance disposal.

Advice and engineering training on the C130 transport aircraft for 15 ground engineers and technicians from the Sri Lankan Air Force.

Additionally, nine Sri Lankan military personnel have attended MOD-run professional courses in the UK. Courses attended are: The Royal Navy Young Officers Course, The Royal Military Academy Sandhurst Commissioning Course, The All Arms Drill Instructors Course, The RAF's Basic Instructional Techniques Course and The Royal College of Defence Studies Course.

MOD funded the explosives ordnance disposal advice and part funded Sri Lankan attendance on the 1999 RCDS course. All other military assistance was funded either by the Sri Lankans or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Territorial Army

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by arm or corps (a) the intervals between emergency operational tours as at 1 July 1999 and (b) the proportionate manpower cuts taken by each arm or corps in the latest reorganisation of the Territorial Army. [107412]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 2000]: The average theoretical operational tour interval as at 1 July 1999 for those Arms and Corps for which figures are readily available are set out in the table. These figures reflect the high level of operational commitments that was being experienced at the time: this level of commitment has reduced significantly since then with the reductions in force levels in the Balkans. Figures for the other arms/corps are not routinely calculated.

Arm/Corps	Tour interval (months)
Royal Armoured Corps	12
Royal Artillery	18
Royal Engineers	7
Royal Signals	6
Infantry	15

The following table shows the proportionate TA manpower reduction for the same arms/corps:

Arm/Corps	Manpower reduction (Percentage)
Royal Armoured Corps	49
Royal Artillery	25
Royal Engineers	51
Royal Signals	[1] —
Infantry	55

[1] No reduction

RAF Future Procurement

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on the future strategic transport aircraft and tactical transport aircraft for the RAF. [104402]

Dr. Moonie: We hope to be in a position to make a decision on our Short Term Strategic Airlift programmes early this year.

Staff Bonuses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the new year period; what were the (a) maximum and (b) minimum bonuses paid; how many people received the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum bonuses paid; and if he will make a statement. [104484]

Dr. Moonie: In addition to the normal bank holiday rates of double time, MOD civilian staff below the Senior Civil Service were entitled to claim an additional plain time rate for hours worked in a limited period either side of midnight on 31 December 1999, and also receive a lump sum payment of £100. It is too early to know how many staff will claim such payments or what the total cost will be but the numbers involved will only be a very small proportion of the Department's employees.

Departmental Land (Access Rights)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rights of access currently exist for walkers on his Department's land. [105498]

Dr. Moonie: There is a presumption of access to MOD land wherever this is consistent with military activities, the health and safety of the public, environmental and conservation considerations, and the interests of our tenants. There have been leaflets and publications available for some years, most notably the booklet "Walks on MOD Lands", giving information about access opportunities on the Defence Estate. A copy of this booklet will be placed in the Library of the House. My Department is working to improve both public access and the provision of information. The booklet is currently under review and a revision will be published later in the year. Work is also being undertaken to develop an access website.

C-130J Transport Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received on the trials of the C-130J transport aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [106156]

Dr. Moonie: I am not aware of any such representations.

BBC World Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the votes and subheads for the funds which cover his Department's financial contribution to BBC World Service monitoring; and if he will make a statement on their purpose. [106863]

Dr. Moonie: BBC Monitoring provides a valued information service to Government. Rapid reporting of open source information from around the world is an important aspect of the work of the MOD and other parts of Government. The MOD contribution is 40 per cent. of BBC's Monitoring funding, and is included within the expenditure shown within Class VI, Vote 1, Part II, Section J of the MOD's Supply Estimates 1999–2000, a copy of which is in the Library.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence above what level a saving from an individual efficiency measure must be reported to his Department by budget-holders. [107414]

Mr. Spellar: The normal delegations of financial authority to budget holders set reporting levels for expenditure not savings. There is no specific financial level of savings for which current individual efficiency measures must be reported to MOD HQ. Individual measures are reported if the budget holder considers them significant, in line with their delegated authority.

With the introduction of Resource Accounting and Budgeting in the MOD, Top Level Budget holders will in the future be required to report individual efficiency measures reducing expenditure by more than £0.5 million in any year compared to the previous year.

Adventure Training

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the decision no longer to employ full-time civilian adventure training instructors for the Army in Germany following the 1998 Review of Adventure Training was scored as an efficiency savings measure for budget purposes. [107410]

Mr. Spellar: The arrangements for Adventurous Training in Germany have recently been restructured. The training has been more closely focused on military requirements and the number of individuals trained reduced. The facilities are now paid for entirely from public funds, rather than from a mix of public and non-public funds as previously. No efficiency savings have been scored as a result of these changes.

Horizon Programme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the lessons learned which will be built into the Smart Procurement Initiative from the outcome of the Horizon Programme; and if he will make a statement. [107042]

Dr. Moonie: I am pleased to say that the principal "lessons learned" from the outcome of the Horizon programme covering procurement strategy, risk reduction, communication with industry at an early stage of the project, and affordability have already been built into the Smart Procurement Initiative, thus ensuring that they will be applied in all future circumstances. Other lessons included work share arrangements. The involvement of trans-national companies and OCCAR are likely to be helpful in dealing with work share issues. These types of issues will be taken into account as Smart Procurement Implementation progresses.

Land Mines

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Governments and private companies were involved in the sale of land mines formerly held by UK armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [107272]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 28 January 2000]: All UK operational stocks of anti-personnel mines (APMs) as defined under the Ottawa Convention were destroyed by 19 October 1999 as the Convention required. None of these stocks were sold, either to Governments, or to private companies. Details of historical holdings of APMs by UK armed forces would not be available without disproportionate cost.

RAF Expenditure

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on the RAF in the current financial year to date; and how much he plans to expend in the remainder of the financial year. [107599]

Mr. Spellar: The information cannot be provided in the requested format. Information is available for RAF Strike Command, RAF Personnel and Training Command and RAF Logistics Command and shows the spend reported up to 31 December 1999 is £2,868 million. The planned expenditure for the current financial year is approximately £4,160 million.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106232]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 31 January 2000]: There is no evidence of a successful incursion, from an external source, to any Departmental computer system during the past five years. There were two cases during 1999 of corruption of Websites holding Unclassified MOD information. Measures have been taken to secure both these sites. There are widespread and frequent probes of MOD firewalls connected to the Internet, which do not result in successful penetrations of MOD systems. There have, however, been 25 recorded instances during the past five years of internal incursions by MOD staff, none of which had any operational impact. Appropriate disciplinary measures were taken, as required, in each case.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106213]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 31 January 2000]: There have been no cases in the past five years in which MOD computers have been used to directly expedite a fraud against the MOD. There have been 18 cases where MOD computers have been used in support of fraudulent activities. There have been 594 reported cases of computer theft within the MOD over the past five years.

Naval Ship Rules

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings will result from switching to the Lloyd's Register Naval Ship Rules; and if he will make a statement. [108036]

Mr. Spellar: It is expected that Lloyd's Register's Naval Ship Rules will, by capitalising on the Rules for the design, construction and maintenance of commercial shipping, lead to savings in this area of at least £1 million per annum.

Army Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to improve the anticipated shortfall of personnel in the Army by 2005; what implications these will have on readiness; and if he will make a statement. [108035]

Mr. Spellar: The Army is currently forecasting a return to a state of full manning by around April 2005. The current manning deficit is being tackled by a series of recruiting and retention-positive measures. These include significant improvements which have been made to the operational welfare package, a reduction in force deployments to both Bosnia and Kosovo, and the Learning Forces initiative. Welcome progress has also been made by the Services Families Task Force, which is addressing a variety of issues relating to military service that are of concern to Service personnel.

Army Training Camp, Bramley

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the army training camp at Bramley, Basingstoke. [108067]

Mr. Spellar: The Army has a continuing requirement for Bramley Training Area and there are no current plans for major development to the facility, or disposal of the site.

Nancekuke

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 78W, on Nancekuke, what the scrap metal was composed of, in what quantity it was found and on what dates and what was the obsolete plant. [107634]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 31 January 2000]: Documentary evidence states that the scrap metal consisted of decontaminated chemical plant, service pipework, cubicle fronts and structural steelwork. The actual quantities are unknown. It is considered that the majority of materials would have been dumped between the closure decision in 1976 and the vacation of the site by the Chemical Defence Establishment in 1978. I am not aware of any documentary evidence as to the nature of the 'obsolete plant' referred to in the question.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 70W, on Nancekuke, if he will place in the Library a map indicating the exact locations of the mineshafts; and if all mineshafts were examined in 1991 by the National Rivers Authority. [107635]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 31 January 2000]: A copy of a map indicating the locations of the relevant mineshafts will be placed in the Library of the House. Water sampling was conducted by the National Rivers Authority between 1990 and 1992, and there is no evidence of mineshafts having been examined.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December 1999, Official Report, column 454W, on departmental research contacts, if he will place a copy of the standard research contract in use by his Department in the Library. [107099]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 1 February 2000]: The Department does not use a standard research contract. Terms and conditions of contracts for research differ according to the work required.

Standing Civilian Courts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average period which elapses between the commission of an offence and the date of the subsequent trial in standing civilian courts. [107870]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 2000]:

The Naval Service

The Naval Service does not hold civilian standing courts.

The Army

The average period between an offence being committed and the date of a trial in a subsequent standing civilian court is eight months for 1st hearing (a guilty plea) and 10 months for 2nd hearing (not guilty plea).

The RAF

The average period between an offence being committed and the date of a trial in a subsequent standing civilian court is six months for 1st hearing (guilty plea) and nine months for 2nd hearing (not guilty plea).

Chinook MK2

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the helicopter Chinook MK2 was subjected to a full vehicle electro-magnetic interference test using the radio environmental generator by Boscombe Down as part of its CIA release trials in January 1994. [108052]

Mr. Spellar: Yes.

Vehicle Maintenance

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of maintenance man-hours per driving hour for (a) Warrior variants, (b) Challenger 1, (c) Challenger 2, (d) Saxon variants, (e) AVF 430 variants, (f) Sabre, (g) Striker, (h) Scimitar, (i) Spartan, (j) Sultan, (k) Samaritan and (l) Samson in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [107548]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is not held in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Driver hours are not used as currency for measuring equipment usage. Usage is controlled through activity set by annual track mileage allocations for each vehicle type. Maintenance in the Land environment is different from that in, for example, the Air environment where they use largely scheduled maintenance based on flying hours. Maintenance of Army tanks and vehicles is achieved through a mix of planned maintenance (servicing based on time and mileage) and reactive repair maintenance. The latter regime is the larger element.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Dancing

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the timetable is for the implementation of his proposal to legalise Sunday dancing. [107613]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 17 January, we laid before Parliament a draft Deregulation Order to remove the ban on commercial dancing on Sundays. The draft Order is now subject to the usual process of scrutiny by the Parliamentary Deregulation Committees, and approval by both Houses. That process is likely to take until the summer. If approved, the ban on Sunday dancing would be lifted three months later, to allow time for applications to trade on Sundays to be heard.

Circus Animals

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Protection of Animals Act 1911 with respect to circus animals; and if he will make a statement. [107731]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have made no formal assessment of the effectiveness of the Protection of Animals Act 1911 with regard to circus animals. In 1998, there were 1,107 prosecutions made under the Act, but these figures do not show details of the animals involved or the profession of the defendants. The figures do, however, confirm that the Act—which covers all domestic and captive animals—is frequently used, and we have been given no reason to doubt its general effectiveness.

Circus animals, when being trained and performing, have additional protection against cruelty under the provisions of the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925.

Anti-Irish Discrimination

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to tackle anti-Irish discrimination. [107588]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I should make it clear that Irish people already receive the protection that current legislation provides. The Race Relations Act 1976 makes it unlawful for anyone to discriminate against another on ethnic grounds. Successful complaints in relation to discrimination against the Irish have been brought by the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) resulting in compensation payments and agreements by organisations to change their practices. A Bill currently before Parliament will amend the 1976 Act by extending it to the functions of public authorities not currently covered by the Act. The Bill will also put a statutory duty on public authorities to promote racial equality.

It is also an offence to incite ethnic hatred against the Irish community by virtue of part III of the Public Order Act 1986. Racist violence and harassment towards members of the Irish community falls under the new racially aggravated offences in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

The Government are also addressing the specific issues of discrimination and disadvantage faced by some sections of the Irish community. These were highlighted in the CRE's Report, "Discrimination and the Irish Community in Britain" which has been the subject of a number of discussions which I and my colleagues across Whitehall have been having with the Irish Ambassador and representatives from Irish organisations.

One of the major issues was a recommendation that there should be a separate Irish category in the ethnic origin question in the next Census in 2001. The Draft Census Order for England and Wales was laid before Parliament on Monday 10 January. It includes an ethnicity question with a category for "Irish" cultural background in the "White" section.

We will continue to look carefully at other concerns to ensure that the Irish community has full access to the rights and opportunities.

WRVS (Prisons)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prisons in which the WRVS deliver services, and the nature of the services. [107580]

Mr. Boateng: The invaluable support which the Women's Royal Voluntary Service (WRVS) offers to the Prison Service covers a large part of the prison estate with around a hundred prisons benefiting from the work of WRVS volunteers. The services provided by the WRVS include the provision of supervision for children's visits to parents in prisons; the running of prison visitors' centres and their tea bars; and the development of toy libraries for visiting children. In view of the differing needs of prisons, the development of partnerships with the WRVS is undertaken by individual establishments. Detailed information about the use of volunteers in prisons is not available centrally, however, a survey of all prisons is being undertaken with a view to establishing more specific information about their use of volunteers.

Prison Visits

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to use a computerised booking system for visits to prisoners. [107581]

Mr. Boateng: The use of a computerised booking system will be looked at during the course of a review of visits policy. Its feasibility will also be examined as part of the Prison Service public/private sector partnership project, Quantam, which aims to deliver improved services through the effective use of information technology.

Prisoners (Money)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the permitted methods for families to send money to prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [107579]

Mr. Boateng: Families can send money to prisoners by cheque, postal order or cash. Under Prison Rule 43(3), prisoners' money must be held in an account under the control of the governor. Postal orders and cheques therefore, should be made payable to the governor of the prison and the sender of the money must always be identified.

Child Pornography

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals were prosecuted for offences in connection with child pornography on the internet in each year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [107574]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Offences involving child pornography on the internet would be prosecuted under either section 1 and section 6 of the Protection of Children Act 1978 as amended or section 160 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 as amended.

However, court proceedings data received centrally under this legislation do not specify the type of medium used.

The table shows the number of persons prosecuted under the above legislation.

Number of persons prosecuted at magistrates courts for child pornography offences, England and Wales, 1994–98

Offence	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998
Take, or make indecent photographs or pseudo-photographs of children[1]	40	53	80	111	116

Fox Hunting

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations lay behind his decision to include in the membership of the inquiry into the economic impact of fox hunting individuals with a record of support for fox hunting. [107618]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) on 1 February 2000, Official Report, columns 504–06W. The members of the inquiry team were recommended on the basis of their knowledge and expertise. They have been appointed to provide a view on the issues before the Committee. These extend beyond the economic impact of hunting with dogs.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were tagged in the latest 12-month period for which figures are available; and what number and percentage broke the terms of their tagging order. [107617]

Mr. Boateng: In the period from 28 January 1999 to 26 January 2000, a total of 19,164 persons were subject to a curfew with electronic monitoring. Of these, 16,242 were released from prison on Home Detention Curfew under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. The remaining 2,922 were monitored under a range of other provisions.

As of 26 January, of the 16,242 offenders placed on the Home Detention Curfew (HDC) scheme, 766 have had their licences revoked by the Secretary of State and a further 41 have been referred to the courts either by the Probation Service or the police for breach action (807 in total, amounting to 5 per cent. of all offenders placed on HDC).

Of the 766 offenders whose licences have been revoked, in 517 cases the offender had been in breach of the curfew conditions, in 226 cases it was no longer possible to monitor the offender's whereabouts electronically, in seven cases the offender was deemed to present a risk of serious harm and in 16 cases the licence was revoked under section 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 following a breach of the non-curfew conditions of the licence.

Of the 2,922 persons monitored under the other provisions, a total of 353 (12 per cent.) have had their curfew order or curfew condition revoked by the courts. Information on the reason for the revocation is not centrally available.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what offences were committed by prisoners released under the Home Detention Curfew scheme who re-offended while on the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [108098]

Mr. Boateng: As of 31 January 2000, the Prison Service had received notification of 174 curfewees who had been charged with an offence committed while subject to the Home Detention Curfew scheme. A breakdown of the offences committed by these curfewees is shown in the table.

This breakdown has been prepared from information supplied by police forces and drawn from the police national computer. Further analysis of re-offending by those subject to home detention curfew is currently underway as part of a long term evaluation of the scheme, including the procedures for notification of further charges to the Prison Service by the police.

Overall, the Home Detention Curfew scheme has been a success, with 95 per cent. of curfewees completing their period of curfew licence. However, we are not complacent about any re-offending on curfew and the scheme is strictly enforced. Where a prisoner does commit a further offence while subject to curfew, he or she is in breach of their licence conditions, and may be recalled to prison, in addition to the possibility of additional sentence for the new offence.

Offences curfewees charged with while on home detention curfew

Offence type	Number
Burglary, theft and shoplifting (including Taking without consent and taking and driving away)	62
Assault	31
Driving and traffic offences	15
Breach of the peace (including drunk and disorderly)	14
Drug offences	13
Handling stolen goods/deception	10
Criminal damage	10
Threatening behaviour	8
Breach of a court injunction or restraining order	3
Possession of an offensive weapon	3
Harassment	1
Going equipped	1
False imprisonment	1
Arson	1
Indecent exposure	1
Total	174

Note:
Where a curfewee was charged with more than one offence, they appear in the table next to the most serious offence. The table excludes cases where, following initial notification, the Prison Service was informed that charges had been withdrawn.

Road Accidents

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were successfully brought against drivers who caused road traffic accidents while at work in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [107658]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not available as the circumstances of the offence and the employment status of the offender are not collected centrally.

Chelmsford Prison

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide funds for the provision of accommodation at Chelmsford Prison to enable a full search of visitors suspected of possessing drugs. [107726]

Mr. Boateng: Visitors to Chelmsford prison are subject to a "pat-down" search and must pass through an X-ray portal. A passive drug detection dog is deployed. Visitors may not take property into the visits area and lockers are provided for bags and other possessions. Any items to be handed in to prisoners are X-rayed.

There are no plans to provide facilities for strip-searching of visitors at Chelmsford. Capital funding for the Prison Service is limited and other projects linked to the provision of places and the maintenance of security have priority.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers and refugees are residing in the Eastbourne area. [107600]

Mrs. Roche: This information is not available. Central Government do not keep records of the number of asylum seekers residing in a particular location.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time taken to determine asylum applications from asylum seekers who submitted their applications in 1991. [107294]

Mrs. Roche: It is estimated that the average length of time taken to reach an initial decision on an asylum application lodged in 1991 was 25 months.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions have been made to date as a result of the measures announced in the White Paper, "Fairer Faster and Firmer", on asylum applications made (a) between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 and (b) before 1 July 1993; and how many of these resulted in (i) a grant of asylum, (ii) exceptional leave to remain and (iii) refusal. [107109]

Mrs. Roche: The requested information is given in the table.

Immigration Appeals

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has, in the light of the judgment in the case of R. v. Secretary of State for the Home Department ex-Parte Ali, to review his policy of refusing to accept recommendations by immigration appellate authority adjudicators when an appeal is dismissed. [107433]

Mrs. Roche: It is not our policy to refuse to accept recommendations made by adjudicators in dismissed or withdrawn appeals. We will act on such recommendations where the written determination discloses clear exceptional compassionate circumstances which have not previously been considered and which would merit an exercise of discretion outside the Immigration Rules. We have no plans to review this policy following the judgment in the case of R. v. Secretary of State for the Home Department ex-Parte Ali.

Crown Court Appeals

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if it is his intention to allow prosecution and defence to make oral representations in open court during an appeal against magistrates decision on mode of trial under his proposal to restrict the right to elect trial by jury; [108102]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of an appeal to the Crown Court against magistrates decision as to mode of trial, under his proposals to restrict the right to trial by jury; [108100]

(3) further to his answer of 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 250W, on Crown Court appeals, what his estimate is of the number of defendants who would appeal to the Crown Court against magistrates decisions as to mode of trial each year under his proposals; and what assumptions underlie that estimate. [108151]

Mr. Straw: The Government believe that most of these appeals could be determined very quickly on the basis of the papers by a single judge. However, they intend to give the judge the power to permit oral representations to be made to him by both the prosecution and defence if he considers it necessary in the interests of justice to do so. It is estimated that a paper based appeal to the Crown Court would cost £90 and an oral appeal would cost an additional £182. It is assumed that 3,900 or 25 per cent. of defendants would appeal.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how his Department will monitor the (a) number, (b) cost and (c) effectiveness of the anti-social behaviour orders. [107352]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are in the process of setting up arrangements for the courts to monitor the number of anti-social behaviour orders granted in their area and to provide us with a quarterly return. We are committed to reviewing the effectiveness of the provision once it has been in force for two years. I will ensure that this research also looks into cost issues.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the operation of the Schengen Agreement. [107503]

Mrs. Roche: The Schengen acquis has now been incorporated into European Union structures in accordance with the Schengen Protocol to the Treaty of Amsterdam. The acquis continues to operate as between signatory states. The United Kingdom submitted a formal application to participate in parts of the Schengen acquis on 20 May 1999, which is still under consideration.

Criminal Assets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the enforcement of the Government's policy on seizure and pursuit of criminal assets. [106589]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This Government are determined to ensure that criminals do not keep their ill-gotten gains. The third report of the Home Office Working Group on Confiscation—published in November 1989—proposed a range of measures to tighten up the enforcement of criminal confiscation orders. Since the Working Group reported, the Government have been considering more widely whether some confiscation and forfeiture functions, including the enforcement of confiscation orders, might be operated more effectively by a national confiscation agency. In the autumn, the Prime Minister asked my right hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield, Minister of State at the Cabinet Office (Mr. McCartney), to act as sponsor Minister for a project in the Cabinet Office's Performance and Innovation Unit to consider the role that following the money trail and seizing criminal assets can play in the fight against crime and how to maximise the effective use of these tools. The Performance and Innovation Unit is expected to report in the spring and a White Paper proposing comprehensive action against financial crime to issue shortly thereafter.

Kosovar Refugees

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1999, Official Report, column 140W, on Kosovar refugees, if he will update the figures provided in his answer; how many of the 4,346 Kosovar refugees admitted to the United Kingdom under the UNHCR Humanitarian Evacuation Programme have left the United Kingdom voluntarily; and what action he intends to take in respect of those who have not yet left the United Kingdom to return to Kosovo. [108120]

Mrs. Roche: The information provided in my reply on 14 December 1999, Official Report, column 140W, on nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia is the latest available.

As at 31 January, 1,570 Kosovans had returned. Of those 182 had left under the 'explore and prepare programme'.

All the evacuees were given 12 months' Exceptional Leave to Remain in the United Kingdom and will not have their stay curtailed. We have made clear that there will not be a general extension of leave for those granted Exceptional Leave to Remain (ELR) under the Kosovan concession and Kosovans are expected to make arrangements to leave once their current leave to remain expires.

The voluntary return programme from the United Kingdom began on 26 July 1999 and is open to Kosovans who arrived under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme and independent arrivals. Returnees are provided with the necessary travel documentation to enable them to travel under the arrangements put in place by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organisation for Migration (IOM). The Government are also running an Explore and Prepare scheme to enable heads of households and community leaders with ELR to return to Kosovo to make advance preparations for the permanent return of their families. We expect a large return this spring and are working to ensure that it comes about.

Operation Runacre

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the negligent discharge of a police firearm on 20 January

1998 in the course of Operation Runacre, stating when it was first officially reported and by whom; and what subsequent investigation was carried out into it. [106712]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand from the Metropolitan Police that an allegation concerning a negligent discharge of a firearm was first made anonymously. This was investigated by the Metropolitan Police's Complaints Investigation Bureau a few days after the incident, and the investigation concluded that no discharge had occurred. Since then, additional allegations have been made and the incident is being reinvestigated by the Criminal Investigation Bureau.

Drugs (Prisons)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many undercover police operations investigating the use or supply of illegal drugs took place in prison establishments in each of the past two years; if the prison authorities were notified in advance and if (a) use and (b) supply was detected. [107929]

Mr. Boateng: There are occasions when, at the request of the police, or other investigatory authority, approval is granted for an undercover operation to be conducted within a prison. There were eight such operations in 1998 and 16 in 1999. All these operations took place with approval from Prison Service headquarters and the prior knowledge of the local prison authorities. Two of the above operations related to the supply of drugs within the prisons concerned but the majority related to the large scale supply of illegal drugs outside prison. The outcome of these operations is not known to the prison authorities.

There will also have been a number of operations conducted locally to each prison involving co-operation between the local police and the prison in relation to the supplying of illegal drugs into that prison. Information concerning these operations is not collated centrally but it is known that in the 12 months ending 31 December 1999, 823 visitors to prison were arrested attempting to bring drugs into prisons.

Misuse of Drugs Act 1971

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue further guidance regarding the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. [107865]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 1 February 2000, Official Report, column 512W.

Immigration

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the inquiries have been completed into the effectiveness of immigration controls and the entry of foreign nationals into the UK who have been investigated for war crimes; and if he will make a statement. [108083]

Mrs. Roche: Those convicted or suspected of war crimes may be prevented from entering the United Kingdom in accordance with the powers in Rule 320 of the Immigration Rules. We are considering the scope for obtaining better information on those who may be war criminals so that those powers can be used to best effect. This review is not yet completed.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Fiat Applications

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Solicitor-General how many applications have been made to him in each of the last three years for his fiat; in respect of what proceedings such applications were made; and in how many and in what percentage of such cases in each category he (a) granted and (b) withheld his consent. [107831]

The Solicitor-General: The information requested could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. Statistics are not maintained. It is estimated that the information is contained in many different files, catalogued in a number of different series. For example, in criminal cases, consents to prosecution cover a wide range of criminal offences. There are also fiats which relate to civil proceedings. The work involved in providing an accurate answer would breach the established limits for the amount of work that should be undertaken in answering parliamentary questions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Human Genome Project

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to ensure a common approach between the USA, the UK and the rest of the European Union to patents arising from the human genome project. [106603]

Ms Hewitt: The public and charitable funders of the international human genome project have agreed that they will release the gene sequence information they generate as quickly as possible; and they will not patent that information. The Government strongly support this approach as it allows maximum exploitation by public and private sector researchers of the data generated. Nonetheless, translating fundamental genome sequence information into new gene-based diagnostics and therapeutics will, in many circumstances, involve sufficient innovation to justify intellectual property protection.

The EU Directive on the Legal Protection of Biotechnological Inventions, which will come into force later this year, harmonises national patent laws within Europe. There are certain global norms, upon which the EU system is based, which are followed by other national authorities, including those of the United States. It is a matter solely for the national authorities to interpret these criteria in relation to applications for patents, including those concerning the human genome.

Export Licences

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Standard Individual Export Licences have been issued to (a) Sri Lanka and (b) Colombia covering ratings (i) ML1, (ii) ML2, (iii) ML3, (iv) ML11 and (v) 1C350 since 31 December 1997. [107518]

Dr. Howells: Details of all SIELs and OIELs issued between 1 January and 31 December 1998 were set out in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; copies are in the Library of the House.

As regards export licences granted between 1 January 1999 and 24 January 2000, the Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Twenty-six Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Sri Lanka of goods with the ratings ML1, ML2, ML3, ML11 and 1C350; two such licences were issued for the export of such goods to Colombia.

Rating	Number of SIELs issued to Sri Lanka covering goods with this rating	Number of SIELs issued to Colombia covering goods with this rating
ML3	6	0
ML11	5	1
1C350	5	0

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08W.

Utilities Bill

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish draft guidance under Clauses 9 and 13 of the Utilities Bill. [107665]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 31 January 2000]: I intend to publish a preliminary draft of the social and environmental guidance for the energy sector provided for under Clauses 9 and 13 of the Utilities Bill shortly.

TransTec

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the inquiry he has commissioned into TransTec will cover the decision by Ford UK to execute their penalty clauses. [107875]

Mr. Byers: The conduct of the inspection is a matter for the independent inspectors.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has made to ensure that the current inquiry into TransTec does not prevent its sale as a going concern. [108048]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 1 February 2000]: Any sale of TransTec is a matter for the administrative receivers. The inspection should not affect any commercial arrangements being made by them.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has made to minimise the impact on creditors, suppliers and employees of the current inquiry into TransTec. [108049]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 1 February 2000]: There is no reason why the inspection, as such, should have any impact on creditors, suppliers and employees.

Post Office Smart Card

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Post Office management on the research and development needed for the production of a smart card. [108051]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 1 February 2000]: My right hon. Friend and I maintain an ongoing dialogue with the Post Office Board on the development of the Horizon project including the use of smart card technology.

Post Office (ACT)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department last had discussions with Post Office management on the subject of automated credit transfer of the benefits business. [108050]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 1 February 2000]: My right hon. Friend and I have frequent discussion with Post Office management about a wide range of issues including the Horizon project to automate the post office network and the planned migration of payment of benefits from order books and girocheques to an automated credit transfer system.

Regional Development Funds

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with his ministerial colleagues about Government plans to meet their obligations in the United Kingdom's European Union Objective 1 regions. [106590]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend and I have frequent contacts with ministerial colleagues on various aspects of the European structural funds.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1999, Official Report, column 572W, on departmental research contracts, if he will (a) state total expenditure on research let by his Department since May 1997 and (b) list the titles of all research contracts let by his Department during 1999 and costing £20,000 or more, stating what is the value of each contract, and in each case whether the contract included (i) departmental veto over publication of the research results, (ii) departmental control over the date of publication of the research and (ii) a requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments; and if he will place a copy of the standard research contract currently in use by his Department in the Library. [107094]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 1 February 2000]: The 1999 Forward Look of Government-Funded Science, Engineering and Technology shows total extramural expenditure on research and development by the Department of Trade and Industry for the last two financial years as follows:

	£ million
1997–98	276.9
1998–99	[1]259.2

[1] Estimated outturn

In respect of (b), this information would be available only at disproportionate cost.

A copy of the Department's standard terms and conditions of contract for services has been placed in the Library of the House. These terms and conditions are not specific to research contracts and do not deal with the handling of research results. The terms and conditions agreed may vary to some extent depending on the contract in question. However, as a general rule, the Department actively encourages publication of research it has funded.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what amount, expressed in terms of megawatts, the generators of electricity would have to be reduced in order to reduce carbon dioxide emissions to the equivalent required by the climate change levy. [107919]

Mrs. Liddell: The climate change levy is expected to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by at least 2MtC a year, before including the effect of negotiated agreements. If a 2MtC saving were to be brought about through reductions in electricity generation, this could be achieved either through a reduction of 21 terawatt hours in gas fired generation or 9 terawatt hours in coal fired generation. This would be broadly equivalent to the loss of all output from 3000MW of gas fired plant otherwise operating at a load factor of 80 per cent., or 2000MW of coal fired plant operating at just over 50 per cent. load factor.

Mobile Phones

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will ensure that authorisation of a parent or guardian is needed before children under the age of 16 years enter into financial agreements with mobile phone companies; [107567]

(2) if he will introduce legislation to provide for a parent's or guardian's authorisation before children under the age of 16 years enter into a contract with mobile phone companies. [107652]

Ms Hewitt: The Government do not believe that specific regulation is desirable to prevent those under sixteen years of age from entering into a contract for a mobile phone. It is very unlikely that a consumer credit agreement entered into by person under the age of eighteen, for the purposes of a mobile phone contract, would be enforceable against that person. This is no doubt the reason why operators require a person to be over 18 before they can sign up a mobile contract.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to promote trade between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. [107589]

Mr. Caborn: The services of British Trade International are available to exporters to the Republic of Ireland as they are to exporters to other Western European countries. Activities include the Export Explorer scheme to encourage first-time exporters to visit the Republic, an export promoter to inform companies of the opportunities in the market and encourage them to trade with the Republic and sectoral activities such as the provision of information stands at trade fairs in Ireland.

Internet

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to raise public awareness of the role of the Internet Watch Foundation to investigate alleged pornographic materials; and if he will make a statement. [107573]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are continuing to support the Internet Watch Foundation (IWF), and both Alex Allan, the e-envoy, and I attended its recent re-launch.

Following a recommendation in a recent report, "Review of the Internet Watch Foundation", the IWF is currently pressing Internet Service Providers to put links to the IWF on their sites, in order to make it more visible and accessible to their users. The Government are also working at a European level to promote the work that the IWF has done as a model for the rest of the world.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Internet Watch Foundation in implementing the recommendations of the Department of Trade and Industry/Home Office report entitled Review of the Internet Watch Foundation. [107572]

Ms Hewitt: The Internet Watch Foundation (IWF) has made good progress towards implementing the report's recommendations. Its organisational structure has been revised, as the new chair, Roger Darlington, announced at the IWF re-launch on 25 January. As part of the extended remit announced at the relaunch, the IWF has undertaken a review of the resources required for the hotlines, and extended its work to cover racism on the internet. It is also continuing to participate in developing content filtering and labelling schemes.

Mozambique (Coal)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the final destination of coal being imparted from Mozambique; who is the purchaser; and what estimate he has made of the effect of the imports on employment among mine workers. [107594]

Mrs. Liddell: Information is not collected on the final destination of coal imported into the United Kingdom. Figures for 1999 as a whole are not yet available, but in the first three quarters of 1999 it is estimated that 19,000 tonnes of coal were imported into the United Kingdom from Mozambique—around 0.1 per cent. of total coal imported during the same period. No estimates have been made of the effects of the imports of coal from Mozambique on employment among mine workers.

Coal Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2000,

Official Report, column 521W, what has been the average proportion of compensation paid to successful claims on coal miners' compensation for chronic bronchitis and emphysema, which relates to general damages for pain suffering and loss of amenity. [107175]

Mrs. Liddell: Of the 1,047 claims settled to date the vast majority have been on the basis of a claimant electing to accept an expedited payment following screening spirometry rather than proceeding through a full medical assessment. Such payments are not broken down separately into general and special damages. Nine claims have been settled to date where general and special damages have been separately assessed. The average proportion of compensation paid that relate to general damages, in these cases, is 53 per cent.

Parental Leave

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which other EU member states provide (a) paid and (b) unpaid parental leave; and if he will make a statement about paid parental leave. [108111]

Mr. Alan Johnson: From the information that we hold, it appears that some form of payment is provided in Italy, Sweden, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany and Luxembourg during parental leave, subject to each member state's qualifying conditions.

There does not appear to be any universal provision for payment in Spain, Portugal, Greece, Ireland or the Netherlands.

We have introduced unpaid parental leave in line with the agreement concluded by the social partners and our commitment in the "Fairness at Work" White Paper. Our task now is to monitor the take-up, impact and effectiveness of the new right, which will help to inform future thinking on parental leave.

Departmental Consultation

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the public consultation exercises on policy matters carried out by his Department and its agencies in each of the last five years; who was consulted and by what means; how responses were analysed; how and in what form the results were transmitted to those responsible for the consultation; how the results of the consultation were published; and what analysis has been carried out of the extent and nature of policy changes resulting from the consultation. [106295]

Mr. Byers: This Government are keen to hear what people have to say about their new proposals and policies. My Department has a broad range of responsibilities and interacts directly with the business community and many other interest groups. We consult widely on many issues, using a range of different mechanisms depending on the subject matter and interest groups involved. I regard this as an important aspect of the modernising government initiative. Comprehensive and detailed information in the form requested is, however, not held centrally and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Maintained Schools

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information his Department collects on the number of pupils attending each maintained school in England and Wales; if this information is held centrally; and if it is made available to the public. [107025]

Ms Estelle Morris: For England, the most comprehensive source of information about the number of pupils in maintained schools is that derived from returns made by schools to the Department in January. The annual school Performance Tables (Secondary and Primary) publish, for each school in the tables, the total number of pupils of all ages on the school register in January. This information has been checked with the individual schools as part of the Performances Tables checking exercise.

Matters relating to the collection and release of pupil data in maintained schools in Wales is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Education for Wales.

Durham LEA

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the aggregate schools budget for Durham Local Education Authority in (a) 1998–99 and (b) each of the previous four years. [108010]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Aggregate Schools Budgets (ASB) for Durham Local Education Authority in 1998–99 and the previous four years are as shown in the table. Figures up to 1996–97 are not comparable with those for later years because of local government re-organisation.

	£ million
1998–99	144.4
1997–98	138.4
1996–97	159.6
1995–96	154.2
1994–95	152.3

Standards Fund Grants

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many bids for standards fund grants have been received for 2000–01, broken down by category of grant and by local education authority; [108070]

(2) how many bids for standards fund grants were received in 1999–2000, broken down by category of grant and by local education authority; and how many allocations of grant were taken up in each category. [108071]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 1 February 2000]: The information requested is currently being collected and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers took early retirement in each of the last five years. [108011]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers retiring early from the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector in England and Wales under the premature or ill-health retirement arrangements in each of the last five years were as follows:

Financial year	Premature [1]	Ill-health [2]
1994–95	7,660	5,290
1995–96	9,080	5,190
1996–97	10,730	5,400
1997–98	12,600	3,640
1998–99[3]	2,520	2,500

[1] Since September 1997 the additional cost of premature retirement has been borne by the employer rather than the Teachers' Pension Scheme.
[2] Changes in the statutory regulations governing ill-health retirements came into force in April 1997. To qualify for ill-health retirement benefits since April 1997 a teacher must be regarded as permanently unfit to teach.
[3] 1998–99 data are provisional.

Youth Support Service

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will be publishing details about the proposed youth support service. [108603]

Mr. Wicks: I am pleased to announce that we will publish tomorrow a policy document which sets out the Connexions strategy designed to raise educational achievement for all teenagers and how we envisage the new youth support service will operate. This service, outlined in the White Paper, "Learning to Succeed", will be called the "Connexions Service". Copies of the document will be available in the Vote Office and the Printed Paper Office at 9 a.m. on 3 February. Copies will also be placed in the Library.

We will be publishing a more detailed Connexions Service Prospectus and Specification in the spring.

National Lottery

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the National Lottery funded school sport co-ordinators will be in post. [107163]

Kate Hoey: I have been asked to reply.

The aim is that the first tranche of school sport co-ordinators should be in post during the autumn term 2000.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Street Lighting

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding provision he has made to local authorities for the urgent replacement of lighting columns which are in a critical condition within the United Kingdom in the last twelve months. [107370]

Mr. Hill: Some central Government funding is available to local authorities for new street lighting schemes under the Private Finance Initiative. Where local authorities apply for this funding, proposals should be appraised in line with the Department's "New Approach to Appraisal" to ensure that the benefits and costs (including environmental and safety benefits) are presented in a consistent way.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department has provided on how to assess the condition of concrete lighting columns. [107371]

Mr. Hill: Highways Agency Standard TD23, Inspection and Maintenance of Lighting Columns, details procedures for all types of lighting columns, including concrete. It is used as part of routine maintenance procedures on motorways and trunk roads. The Standard is included in "The Design Manual for Roads and Bridges" and is available for use by local authorities on local roads.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which local authorities have undertaken programmes to test systematically the integrity of lighting columns since 1997. [107372]

Mr. Hill: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the condition of the street lighting network within the United Kingdom. [107369]

Mr. Hill: There is no comprehensive central data collected on the condition of the street lighting network. Routine inspections conducted on motorway and trunk road lighting provide a continuous assessment of the condition of the lighting equipment on those roads. Local highway authorities are responsible for the condition of street lighting on local roads.

Homophobic Bullying

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent independent research the Government have commissioned into (a) the extent of homophobic bullying in schools and (b) the attitudes of teachers to section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988. [107271]

Ms Armstrong: The most recent research into homophobic bullying in schools and teachers' attitudes towards section 28 of which we are aware was published in November 1997 by the University of London's Institute of Education. The Government itself did not commission this, or any other recent research on these issues.

Ghost Ants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports his Department has recently received about infestations by ghost ants; and if he will make a statement. [107164]

Mr. Hill: None.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of extending the right of appeal to opponents of planning applications following granting of planning permission by local authorities. [107564]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is the responsibility of local planning authorities to act in the general public interest when determining planning applications. They must determine applications in accordance with the development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Such considerations can include views expressed by local residents and other third parties. The scope for third parties to participate fully in the development control process has been increased in recent years, through statutory requirements to consult on the preparation of the development plan and to publicise all planning applications. Local authorities' handling of planning applications may also be challenged in the courts. While the introduction of a third party right of appeal would give opponents of particular development proposals further opportunities to have their views considered, this could delay many otherwise acceptable developments on which people have already been consulted.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times he has rejected the recommendations of planning appeals inspectors; what proportion of the total number of such recommendations this represents; and how many such decisions were subsequently the subject of legal challenge, in each of the last five years. [107592]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information is as follows:

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Number of recommendations rejected	8	6	7	10	8
(Total number of recommendations)	(179)	(154)	(153)	(125)	(80)
Proportion of total recommendations	4%	4%	5%	8%	10%
Subject of legal challenge	0	0	0	1	1

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times he has made decisions which were at variance with determinations made by the appropriate local planning authority following an appeal hearing, in each of the last five years. [107593]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In each of the last five years the number of decisions made by the Secretary of State, following a planning appeal which he has recovered, at variance with determinations made by the local planning authority is as follows:

	Number
1995	21
1996	20
1997	16
1998	26
1999	12

Hawksbill Turtles

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the draft proposal by Cuba on hawksbill turtles for discussion at the forthcoming conference of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species. [107609]

Mr. Mullin: This proposal, together with others for consideration at the forthcoming CITES Conference, was discussed at a recent informal meeting of EU experts.

It seems unlikely that the Commission will recommend member states to support Cuba's main proposal. While EU experts were in general agreement that Cuba's precautionary measures, as observed by the fact-finding mission in September 1999, appear to be in order, the status of the species in Caribbean waters remains unclear.

Irish Community

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action his Department is taking to (a) develop and (b) support services to the Irish community in Britain. [107586]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Department's policies and programmes are aimed at promoting social cohesion and at providing opportunity for all. It is however principally for local authorities, housing associations, and local regeneration partnerships to identify the needs of particular communities within their areas, including the Irish community, and to develop and support services to meet these needs.

A66 (Safety)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the safety studies on the A66 will be completed. [107576]

Mr. Hill: The Highways Agency is currently in the process of letting a contract to carry out the study. Work is expected to start during April 2000, and is expected to take about nine months. It is therefore expected that the study will be completed around the end of the year.

Playing Fields

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many proposed developments on playing fields have been referred to him for approval following the introduction of new legislation to protect playing fields; and how many he has objected to. [107725]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Since the Town and Country Planning (Playing Fields) (England) Direction 1998 came into effect on 23 December 1998, 17 planning applications have been referred to the Secretary of State, one of which was called-in for his determination and six of which are currently under consideration.

Tankers (Oil Spills)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures (a) he has introduced and (b) plans to introduce to prevent oil spills from tankers at sea affecting the United Kingdom's coast. [107923]

Mr. Hill: My Department's Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) will shortly be publishing a revised National Contingency Plan for Marine Pollution from Shipping and Offshore Installations. The plan provides a framework for the UK's response to marine pollution from ships and offshore installations. The MCA implements the plan when marine pollution incidents involving ships and offshore installations occur in UK waters. The plan remains under constant review in the light of the experience gained from incidents and exercises.

The MCA also inspects at least one quarter of ships calling at UK ports to ensure that they comply with international safety rules and standards and operates surveillance aircraft to patrol UK waters.

In addition, my Department will shortly begin a consultative process that could lead to the setting up of Marine Environmental High Risk Areas (MEHRAs) to help protect sensitive marine and coastal environments at particular risk from pollution from shipping.

Erika Oil Spill

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assistance his Department is giving to the French authorities in dealing with the Erika oil spill. [107925]

Mr. Hill: My Department's Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) has assisted the French authorities in a number of areas of counter pollution response.

The MCA co-ordinated the provision of an oil recovery vessel, the British Shield. It provided specialist oil recovery equipment for the vessel from its stockpile and an operator to operate and maintain the equipment on site. I understand that this equipment has made a valuable contribution to the oil recovery operation.

Staff from the MCA have visited the affected sector of the French coastline to provide advice on beach clean-up techniques, the nature and fate of the heavy fuel oil involved, and waste disposal. It has co-ordinated the provision of advice on, and assistance with, wildlife cleaning and rehabilitation.

The MCA will continue to assist the French authorities as efforts to clean up oil spilt by the Erika continue.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the Erika oil spill on United Kingdom biodiversity, with particular reference to breeding birds. [107924]

Mr. Hill: None. However, the Government's statutory adviser on wildlife, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, co-ordinates periodic surveys of coastal colonies of seabirds. A full survey is currently under way.

Air Pollution

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects to publish revised guidance on air pollution standards for animal rendering plants; [107935]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of his Department's revised guidance on air pollution standards for animal rendering plants to each of those companies currently rendering under contracts from the Intervention Board under the over-30 months scheme; and how much of this cost will be borne by the Intervention Board. [107934]

Mr. Hill: The revised guidance note was published on 13 January 2000 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House as well as being sent to relevant local authorities and to the UK Renderers Association.

The note contains guidance for the animal rendering sector as a whole. The costs to individual plants will depend, among other things, on the extent to which plant are currently complying with the original 1991 guidance and the techniques used for the purpose of achieving such compliance.

Seamen

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of seamen employed in the UK shipping industry are foreign nationals not resident in the UK. [108023]

Mr. Hill: A Chamber of Shipping manpower survey of its member companies found that in May 1999 17.4 per cent. of officers and 22 per cent. of ratings working on Chamber of Shipping member companies' vessels were foreign nationals.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate the use by UK shipping companies of offshore contracts for British seamen employed on domestic services. [108021]

Mr. Hill: The Government committed in their shipping policy paper "British Shipping: Charting a new course" to publish guidelines for the industry on the applicability and use of offshore contracts for seafarers, and to determine whether any amendment to employment rights legislation was necessary.

The Government have set out the current position in a paper to the social partners and are taking it forward in the training and employment catalyst group established to progress the action points from "Charting a new course".

Air Accidents Investigation Branch

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many qualified staff are employed by the Air Accidents Investigation Branch; and what budget they (a) had in 1998–99 and (b) will have in 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [108078]

Mr. Mullin: The Air Accidents Investigation Branch employs 11 professional pilots and 19 graduate engineers. The budget for 1998–99 was £4,121,000. The budget for 1999–2000 is £4,461,000 and for 2000–01 the bid figure is £4,434,000.

Airfield Closures

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) private and (b) public airfields have closed in the UK in the last five years. [108030]

Mr. Mullin: The Department is unable to obtain accurate information regarding all public and private aerodromes which have stopped operating in the last five years.

The only accurate data we have concern the number of licensed aerodromes which have closed in these years. Statistics from the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) show that in the last five years, eight aerodromes have had their licence revoked.

We are aware that in the last five years some aerodromes have received a CAA operating licence and although the figure can vary each year, the number of licensed aerodromes remains fairly constant, on average between 142 and 146.

Rail Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to remove control of overall safety regulation from Railtrack; and on what date he expects the new regime to be in place. [107861]

Mr. Hill: We are presently considering the main functions of Railtrack's Safety and Standards Directorate and where they are best located. The Health and Safety Executive is the sole regulator for railway safety and is involved in this work.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff are employed by each of the regional development agencies. [107941]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The number of full-time equivalent staff employed by each of the regional development agencies at 30 September 1999, the most recent figures available, are as follows. The figures include temporary staff and secondees.

	Number
One NorthEast	232
North West Development Agency	199
Yorkshire Forward	211
East Midlands Development Agency	132
Advantage West Midlands	147
East of England Development Agency	71
South East England Development Agency	95
South West England Development Agency	171

Regional Development Boards

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the regional development board local appointees have resigned since their appointments. [107945]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Of the 102 board members appointed when the Regional Development Agencies were established on 1 April 1999, three board members since have resigned, one each from the South West, West Midlands, and Yorkshire and the Humber regions.

South West Trains

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the decision on South West Trains' application for confirmation of their new byelaws. [107936]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State is currently considering the byelaws submitted to him by South West Trains, the other railway companies and London Underground, alongside the formal representations received on these byelaws following advertisement. A decision will be made on whether to confirm, amend or reject the byelaws submitted by all the train companies later this year.

Housing Finance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy regarding applications for local authorities for the writing off of housing revenue account debts and the source of finance for any approvals of such applications. [107922]

Mr. Mullin: Where the capital receipt which a local authority receives for the transfer of its entire housing stock is less than the debt attributed to the stock, the Government are prepared to make a one-off payment to assist the authority to repay the outstanding Public Works Loan Board debt principal. In such cases the local authority will be required to repay its attributable housing debt shortly after the transfer is completed. These new arrangements were announced to the House on 16 December 1999, Official Report, column 250W, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning following consultation with local authorities and others last year.

Under these arrangements local authorities are required to meet from the capital receipt or their existing resources any premiums arising from the early repayment of debt. An authority with overhanging debt applying for a place on the housing transfer programme must, in addition to meeting the other published criteria, demonstrate that it can pay the premiums arising from the early repayment of debt before they can be allocated a place on the housing transfer programme.

A copy of a guidance note setting out the detailed arrangements was placed in the Libraries of the House and the Vote Office.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that prospective purchasers of new homes are made aware of their energy efficiency through the standardised assessment procedure rating. [107645]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is already a requirement of the building regulations that a person building a new home should calculate the energy rating of the dwelling using the Standard Assessment Procedure, and notify the rating to the relevant building control body. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced last year that the building regulations will be amended to require the builder, in addition, to put up a notice of the energy rating in the new home. My Department is currently working on the details of the amendment to the regulations.

Separately, my hon. Friend announced in October last year proposals to require any person marketing a home to provide a pack of standard information and documents for prospective buyers. We envisage that this pack will include an energy rating, calculated in accordance with the Standard Assessment Procedure.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the public inquiry into Heathrow's proposed fifth terminal will report its findings [108170]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The public inquiry closed on 17 March 1999 and the Inspector has said that he expects to take up to two years to produce his report. The Secretary of State will need to give the report full consideration before reaching a decision.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of policies over the past 10 years in reducing the incidence of rough sleeping. [106594]

Ms Armstrong: Thorough independent evaluations were carried out on each of the three main phases of the Rough Sleepers Initiative, from 1990 to 1999, as well as on smaller individual projects. The most recent evaluation report, "Homes for Street Homeless People, An evaluation of the Rough Sleepers Initiative", was published in December 1999 and copies were placed in the House Libraries.

Gardening Leave

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many officials in his Department are currently on gardening leave; and if he will make a statement. [108158]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We interpret the term "gardening leave" as applying to staff who have no current assignment and are in receipt of full pay and are not required to attend for work.

One member of staff falls into this category.

Road Safety

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will make an announcement about road safety policy; and if he will make a statement. [108157]

Mr. Hill: We will shortly be publishing a new road safety strategy, which will set out a range of measures for improving road safety.

Dangerous Chemicals

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the co-ordination between Government Departments of scientific advice and policy development relating to dangerous chemicals. [106592]

Mr. Meacher: The Government published a strategy on chemicals in the environment, "Sustainable production and use of chemicals: A strategic approach", in December 1999. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

This strategy includes mechanisms for obtaining independent scientific advice and developing policy on dangerous chemicals in the environment in an open and transparent way with the assistance of a new Stakeholder Forum. This Forum will comprise representatives from all of the major stakeholders and will provide advice to Government on the assessment and management of chemicals in the environment. Government Departments, including those with responsibility for health and trade, will be represented on the Forum. Government Departments will continue to work together taking account of the advice from this Forum.

Non-domestic Rates

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to make changes to the appeals system for non-domestic rates valuations from 1 April 2000; and if he will make a statement. [108602]

Ms Armstrong: In March 1999, as part of the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Valuation tribunal service, we consulted on possible changes to the appeals system for business rates. Appeals against a rating assessment can take some years to resolve because of the sheer numbers that are received. At present, businesses are too often in the dark about when their appeal will be considered. This is unacceptable. I believe it is important to businesses that they are given this information and an opportunity to make representations to appropriate bodies for earlier action if they believe this to be necessary.

Therefore we propose the following reforms to improve the business rates appeals system:

- a new comprehensive programme setting out when ratepayers can expect their appeals to be considered by the Valuation Officer and, if any remain unresolved, when the case may be heard by the Valuation Tribunal;
- the opportunity for ratepayers to make representations if they believe that their place in the timetable is unreasonable;
- improvements in the quality and timeliness of information provided to ratepayers about their valuations;
- clear guidelines on what information the ratepayer should be given and when;
- work towards ending the culture of brinkmanship by cutting off last minute discussions prior to the hearing at the Tribunal;
- on a trial basis, exchanging information on valuations prior to Tribunal hearings.

We will also encourage early submissions of appeals, limiting the extent to which late appeals can be retrospective. Existing rating lists will close to any new appeals on 31 March 2001.

I believe that these and other initiatives will bring greater clarity to the appeals system and more certainty to businesses about when their appeals will be resolved. They will be achieved through a combination of regulation and best practice.

Priority will be given to the settlement of appeals relating to the 1995 rating list and previous lists. We intend to deal with these appeals as far as possible before work starts on new appeals against the 2000 list.

Correspondence

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reply to the letter of 6 July 1999 from the hon. Member for South Suffolk. [108044]

Mr. Hill: I replied to the hon. Member on 9 September 1999. I enclose a copy for ease of reference.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Suffolk of 12 January. [108045]

Mr. Hill: I replied to the hon. Member on Monday 31 January. I enclose a copy for ease of reference.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Primary Education

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of the overseas aid budget for the current financial year is targeted at the provision of primary education. [107425]

Clare Short: My Department has commitments totalling around £800 million to education, of which three-quarters is for basic and primary education. We have committed over £300 million to such programmes since May 1997. In 1998–99 over 16 per cent. of bilateral programme commitments were targeted towards primary education.

EU Aid Programme

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list for the past 12 months (a) the financing proposals prepared by the European Commission which her officials have been asked to consider for approval at the European Development Fund Committee and the EC Asia and Latin America Committee, (b) the amounts of European Development assistance concerned for each of these projects, (c) the dates on which her officials received the documentation for these projects, (d) the dates of the meetings at which each of these was to be considered and (e) in each case whether the projects were approved. [106135]

Clare Short: A table listing the financing proposals put forward for approval at the European Development Fund and Asia and Latin America Management Committees over the past year, to the extent that records are available, has been sent to the hon. Member and a copy placed in the Library. The documentation is usually received by officials about three week before each meeting.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Cyclists (Spot Fines)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the (a) Royal Parks Agency and (b) Royal Parks Constabulary about applying spot fines to cyclists caught exceeding speed limits in the Royal Parks. [107457]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 1 February 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had any discussions with the Royal Parks Agency, which includes the Royal Parks Constabulary, about applying spot fines to cyclists caught exceeding speed limits in the Royal Parks.

There is a practical obstacle to enforcing speeding offences against cyclists because bicycles are not obliged to have speedometers. However, we constantly monitor the impact of cycling on other park users. If we find that problems are arising, we will consider what measures might be appropriate to deal with them, including the introduction of fixed penalty notices.

Playing Fields

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received about access to sports playing fields by inner-city schools. [108133]

Kate Hoey: Since the beginning of the new school term in September, my right hon. Friend and I have received no such representations.

National Lottery

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list for each parliamentary constituency (a) the total proceeds in cash terms of National Lottery ticket sales over the past five years, (b) the total grants to good causes for the last five years, and (c) the total prize money distributed over the last five years; if he will give in each case the average figure for all constituencies; and if he will make a statement. [106504]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 24 January 2000]: I have placed in the Libraries of the House tables showing (a) total National Lottery tickets sales by constituency (average for each constituency, £38,290,852); and (b) total National Lottery awards by constituency (average for each constituency, £10,838,719) for the first five years of the National Lottery (to 13 November 1999). The total amount won in prizes over the same period was £11,926,610,114, which equates to an average of £18,098,043 per constituency. The breakdown of prizes by constituency is not available.

Historic Aircraft

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if historic military aircraft restoration projects are eligible for lottery funding; and if he will make a statement. [107374]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 28 January 2000]: The Heritage Lottery Fund can support a wide variety of projects relating to aviation heritage, including the restoration of historic military aircraft. The Trustees are willing to consider projects involving the long-term conservation; housing and interpretation of important aircraft. However, they do not expect to fund projects which restore aircraft to flying condition, given the risk of accident.

English Heritage

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the percentage of (a) registered disabled people, (b) women, (c) people from ethnic minorities and (d) people from (i) independent schools, (ii) grammar schools and (iii) other schools that worked for English Heritage in each of the years (i) 1970, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1989 and (iv) 1999. [107010]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 27 January 2000]: English Heritage, which is sponsored by this Department, has provided the following statistics for 1999 from information held on employees:

	Percentage
Registered disabled	0.37
Women	53.88
Ethnic minorities	2.32

Historic data for the earlier years are not readily available. English Heritage was not established until 1984 and in 1989 it did not have a computer system which could record this information. English Heritage does not maintain a record of the schools attended by employees.

Football Regulator

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to introduce a Football Regulator; and what recent representations he has received from the (a) Football Association and (b) Premier League on this matter. [107298]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 28 January 2000]: A number of the recommendations contained in the final report of the Football Task Force, which was published on 22 December, relate to the future regulation of football. The Task Force was divided on the merits of different kinds of regulator with some recommending a "Football Audit Commission" and others an "Independent Scrutiny Panel". The Government are now considering all the Task Force's recommendations and will respond in due course. The Department has received no recent representations from either the Football Association or the FA Premier League on this matter.

Sport England

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last met the Chairman and Chief Executive of Sport England; and what matters were discussed. [107297]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 28 January 2000]: My right hon. Friend and I last met the Chairman and Chief Executive of Sport England on 26 January 2000 to discuss the possible location for a venue for major international athletics events.

Royal Opera House

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the reasons for (a) cancelled and (b) halted performances at The Royal Opera House indicating the action taken by the board of management in relation to faulty construction work in each case; and if he will make a statement. [107064]

Mr. Alan Howarth: In December 1999, the Royal Opera House cancelled six performances of a Ligeti production scheduled for December and a further five performances of other productions scheduled to take place between January and April. Technical rehearsal time for these productions, which had been planned for Autumn 1999, was spent commissioning the new stage equipment. The cancellation freed time in November and December to enable the Opening Celebration, Falstaff, A Celebration of International Choreography and The Nutcracker to open on schedule and be performed as planned.

The matinee performance of Gawain on 19 January was cancelled as the Royal Opera House management felt it was inappropriate to risk having to make last minute changes to the performance schedule because of unforeseen problems with the stage machinery that could have resulted in delays to the beginning of the performance, and therefore to the schools' return journeys.

The final ballet in a mixed programme of ballets was cancelled on 20 January because problems with the scene shifting equipment had been encountered earlier during the day which delayed the starting time of the performance, threatening the possibility of completing the full programme for the evening within a reasonable time.

The manufacturers of the stage equipment and the Royal Opera House's technical staff are working with the new equipment to debug the system, and all possible measures have been taken to ensure performances take place as planned. To date there have been approximately 40 performances in the main auditorium, and a full programme of performances in the Linbury Studio Theatre and Clore Studio Upstairs, as well as free concerts in the Vilar Floral Hall.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Staff

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department instructs British diplomatic staff overseas not to communicate with individual UK nationals. [107566]

Mr. Hain: Staff overseas are instructed not to send substantive replies to letters on official matters received directly form Members of Parliament but to refer such letters to the Department for answer by the appropriate Minister. There are no such instructions in relation to correspondence with members of the public.

Southern Sudan

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received concerning the use of child soldiers in southern Sudan. [107601]

Mr. Hain: We have received many reports of the use of child soldiers in the ongoing conflict in southern Sudan. The EU sponsored resolution on the Sudan at last year's Commission on Human Rights urges all parties to the conflict not to use children as soldiers. This is a message we repeat regularly.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received concerning the attack on the relief workers of Norwegian Church Aid, Africa Inolanol Church and the Sudanese Episcopal churches in southern Sudan. [107602]

Mr. Hain: I understand that on the morning of 14 January, a Norwegian Church Aid mission looking at displacement and food shortages near Parajok, Eastern Equatoria, was attacked. Two Norwegian Church Aid, one African Inland Church, two Episcopal Church and three Sudan Relief and Rehabilitation Association workers were killed; three others survived.

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the UNICEF estimate of the number of children who have died in Iraq during the period for which sanctions have been imposed; and if he will make a statement. [107591]

Mr. Hain: We are very concerned about UNICEF's preliminary report into Child and Maternal Mortality in Iraq and continue to support efforts to target the humanitarian effort there towards the most vulnerable. We are discussing with UNICEF how they propose to adjust their programme in Iraq in light of the survey and are considering opportunities for working with them.

Meanwhile, the comprehensive resolution on Iraq, SCR 1284, which was drafted and piloted through the Security Council by the UK, includes a raft of measures providing for a bigger and better "oil for food" programme. It also calls on the Government of Iraq at last to prioritise its spending under "oil for food" more effectively and address the needs of vulnerable groups.

In this respect we oppose the present plan prepared by Iraq which allocates just $10 million out of an available sum of $3.5 billion to targeted feeding programmes for malnourished children.

If the Iraqi Government had chosen to prioritise genuinely the humanitarian assistance which has been made availabie since the implementation of UNSCR 986 in 1996, the suffering of the Iraqi people would have been hugely reduced.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has given to INDICT. [108038]

Mr. Hain: We continue to support the INDICT campaign. I made this clear when I spoke at an INDICT function in the margins of last year's Labour party conference. FCO officials remain in regular contact with INDICT representatives, offering advice and support as appropriate.

Egypt

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received regarding the findings of the Egyptian Government's inquiry into the recent killings in the village of Al-Kosheh. [107984]

Mr. Hain: The Egyptian authorities have pledged to carry out a thorough investigation in to the recent events in and around Al-Kosheh and that investigation is ongoing. Our Embassy in Cairo has been following events and has discussed them with the Egyptian authorities.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Egyptian Government regarding the security of the Christian community following the recent killings in the village of Al-Kosheh. [107656]

Mr. Hain: We were concerned to hear of reports of violence in early January in and around Al-Kosheh. Our embassy in Cairo has been following the events and has discussed them with the Egyptian authorities. The Egyptian authorities have pledged to carry out a thorough investigation. That investigation continues.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Fees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the fees his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies collect; how much has been raised or it is anticipated will be raised from each of these fees from 1989–90 to 2004–05; and which of these fees count as negative expenditure. [105996]

Mr. Ingram: Police Division collect two types of fees, one for registration of premises in which explosives are kept and secondly for licences to purchase, possess or use display fireworks. Fireworks licences were introduced in 1996–97.

Police Division treat these receipts as negative public expenditure offsetting them against relevant expenditure. The table shows the actual amount collected and the estimated amounts from 1989–2002 in respect of both fees. Estimates beyond 2002 are not available as the NIO, in line with other Government Departments, do not estimate beyond this period.

Gardening Leave

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officials in his Department are on gardening leave. [107961]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 1 February 2000]: No officials in my Department are on gardening leave.

Decommissioning Commission

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the International Decommissioning Commission's report. [108470]

Mr. Mandelson: I anticipate placing a copy of this report in the Library before the end of the week.

HEALTH

Beta Interferon

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the take up rate of beta interferon for multiple sclerosis sufferers in each of the health authorities in Greater London in each of the last three years. [105425]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is not available.

We have asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to conduct an appraisal of beta interferon as part of its first work programme, and we expect to have authoritative guidance by the summer. Meantime, health authorities should have policies in place which provide for individual cases to be considered on their merits in the light of the evidence available on different forms of treatment.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Department of Health's guidance on the number of expert assessments that need to be carried out before a multiple sclerosis patient can be prescribed with beta interferon; and if he will make a statement. [105426]

Ms Stuart: Guidance issued by the Department in 1995, EL(95)97, advises that patients who apparently fulfil the indications for treatment should be referred to a neurologist for a decision on whether treatment is indicated. A number of laboratory tests are also recommended prior to initiating, and during, therapy. The guidance advises that patients receiving beta interferon treatment should be reviewed by the neurologist at a frequency appropriate to the individual patient's condition, and treatment stopped if for example there are unacceptable side effects.

We have asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to conduct an authoritative appraisal of beta-interferon as part of its first appraisal programme. NICE is expected to report in the summer.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of a course of treatment of beta interferon for a patient with relapsing remitting multiple sclerosis in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [105427]

Ms Stuart: The cost of a one-year course of beta interferon treatment is around £10,000.

Consultants (Suspensions and Dismissals)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS consultants in England are suspended on full pay; and how many have been so suspended for more than (a) three months, (b) six months and (c) nine months. [106537]

Mr. Denham: Figures are held centrally only on suspensions lasting longer than six months. As at 31 December 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, there were two consultants suspended for more than six months and 16 for more than nine months. Information is not collected on suspensions lasting less than six months.

Caesarian Births

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the number of births by caesarian section and (b) the percentage of births this figure represents in the North West Region for each of the past five years. [107141]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 27 January 2000]: Based on the information available to the Department, the estimated figures for the five years 1993–94 to 1997–98, the most current period available, are in the table.

Estimated number of caesarean sections in England

Year	Caesarean delivery percentage	Number of caesareans
1993–94	15	93,000
1994–95	16	93,500
1995–96	16	95,000

Estimated number of caesarean sections in England

Year	Caesarean delivery percentage	Number of caesareans
1996–97	17	98,700
1997–98	17	103,000

Estimated number of caesarean sections in North West Region

Year	Caesarean delivery percentage	Number of caesareans
1993–94	15	11,700
1994–95	15	12,400
1995–96	15	12.000
1996–97	16	13,100
1997–98	16	12,500

Post-natal Depression

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts routinely use the Edinburgh Postnatal Depression Scale at post-natal examinations; and what advice his Department has given on the use of this scale. [107142]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The information requested is not available centrally. The Department has not issued advice specifically on the Edinburgh Postnatal Depression Scale.

We recognise the role of health visitors and midwives in assessing and supporting mothers with post-natal depression. The National Service Framework for mental health, published in September 1999, includes evidence on effective ways of reducing the risks of post-natal depression and sets a target for all health authorities to have protocols agreed and implemented between primary care and specialist services for management of depression and post-natal depression by April 2001.

Funding (Cumbria)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) cash and (b) percentage increase in health funding for (i) North Cumbria Health Authority and (ii) Cumbria Ambulance Service he proposes for 2000–01. [107527]

Mr. Denham: The 2000–01 allocation for North Cumbria health authority is £213.66 million. This represents a cash increase of £13.82 million (6.92 per cent.).

National Health Service trusts receive most of their income from the service agreements they hold with other NHS bodies.

Crohn's Disease

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has evaluated on the alleged connection between Crohn's disease and the drinking of unpasteurised milk. [107356]

Mr. Denham: We are not aware of any specific evidence on the alleged connection between Crohn's disease and the consumption of unpasteurised milk. The Department has examined the alleged link between Crohn's disease and mico para tuberculosis, which can occur in milk.

The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens considered the evidence for and against such a link in 1992 and 1998. In reviewing the more recent evidence in 1998 the Committee concluded that there was not sufficient evidence to revise its earlier opinion that a link was not proven.

Capital Prioritisation

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the review of the Capital Prioritisation Process began; who is undertaking the review; and when the Minister will consider its conclusions. [107416]

Mr. Denham: Officials have been asked to consider the process for prioritising future major capital investment schemes and review whether the current capital prioritisation process properly meets the requirements of Ministers. No external bodies are involved in this process. Ministers will make an announcement in due course.

Royal Marsden and Christie Hospitals

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the amount of non-capital funding in 1998–99 for (a) the Christie Hospital and (b) the Royal Marsden which was derived from (a) his Department, (b) charitable donations, (c) endowments and (d) other sources. [107376]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 January 2000]: The information requested is in the table:

£ million

	Christie Hospital	Royal Marsden
Departmental	38.4	53.1
Charitable including endowments	12.4	0.919
Other sources	6.6	20.1

It should be noted that as cancer service providers both of these hospitals are not directly comparable due to a number of factors which are unique to the Royal Marsden Hospital. These include the population served, level of complex surgery performed, a different case mix, higher building and capital costs as well as higher staffing costs as a result of London weighting.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out total expenditure on the NHS (a) at 1999–2000 prices and (b) as a proportion of natural income for each financial year since 1978–79 and for the remainder of the period covered by the Comprehensive Spending Review; and if he will provide a breakdown between (i) current and (ii) capital expenditure. [107661]

Mr. Denham: The table shows for England, (a) gross National Health Service expenditure, (b) gross current NHS expenditure, (c) gross capital NHS expenditure. It is not possible to provide England NHS expenditure as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product (GDP) as GDP relates to the United Kingdom as a whole rather than England. Column (d) therefore provides Gross UK NHS expenditure as percentage of GDP.

	(a) England total gross [1] NHS expenditure in 1999–2000 prices [2] (£ million)	(b) England total gross NHS current expenditure in 1999–2000 prices (£ million)	(c) England total gross NHS capital expenditure in 1999–2000 prices (£ million)	(d) UK total gross NHS expenditure as a percentage of GDP

2000–01	44,619	42,370	2,054	6.0
2001–02	46,189	43,639	2,264	6.0

[1] Gross NHS expenditure is Net or Government expenditure (ie that financed by the exchequer) plus income from receipts and charges.
[2] Adjusted by 22 December 1999 GDP deflator.
Note:
Figures may not be wholly consistent over the period due to classification changes.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra resources he is making available to meet the demands on the NHS made by asylum seekers and refugees. [107603]

Mr. Hutton: Primary care groups are responsible for planning and commissioning health care for all their population including any asylum seekers that are allocated to their areas. Funding for primary care takes account of visitors from overseas, including asylum seekers and refugees.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many asylum seekers and refugees have presented themselves to (a) general practitioners, (b) district general hospitals and (c) other NHS services in Eastbourne in the last 12 months. [107615]

Mr. Hutton: Between November 1998 and December 1999, 213 asylum seekers and refugees registered with general practitioners in Eastbourne Downs Primary Care Group, the primary care group covering the Eastbourne area.

Information regarding the number of asylum seekers and refugees presenting to district general hospitals and other National Health Service services in Eastbourne is not collected.

Biomedical Scientists

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region his Department's establishment for biomedical scientists. [107608]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not employ Biomedical Scientists working in the National Health Service. Their contracts are held by individual NHS trusts, special health authorities and other statutory authorities.

The available information is shown in the table. Biomedical scientists are included in the table but cannot be separately identified.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): all pathology scientists by region, in England as at 30 September 1998

	Whole-time equivalent	Numbers (headcount)
Northern and Yorkshire	190	200
Trent	110	120
Anglia and Oxford	90	100
North Thames	260	280
South Thames	170	180
South West	130	140
West Midlands	110	110
North and West	200	220
Other	240	250
England Total	1,510	1,600

Notes:
1. "Other" includes staff employed by SHAs, OSAs and other centrally based services.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
3. Due to rounding totals may not equal the sum of component parts.
4. "Pathology scientists" includes Immunologists, Clinical Cytogenetics, Chemical Pathologists, Haematologist etc.
5. Biomedical scientists are included in the totals but cannot be identified separately.

Hearing Aids

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) where the pilot schemes for digital hearing aids will be located; and how individuals who wish to take part in the pilots may do so; [107985]

(2) what are the criteria used for the selection of sites for his Department's new digital hearing aid pilot; [107987]

(3) how many pilot schemes with end dates for hearing aids his Department has created in each of the last three years; what the end dates were; and if the pilot schemes have been rolled out by their end dates. [107988]

Mr. Hutton: The pilot scheme to trail digital hearing aids which we announced recently is a new scheme; there have not been any earlier pilots of a similar nature funded by the Department.

The criteria for the scheme are currently being finalised. We will be writing to National Health Service trusts and health authorities shortly to seek applications from hearing aid departments to participate in the scheme. Details of the participating sites, when agreed, will be publicised.

Leishmaniasis

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision within the NHS for treating leishmaniasis. [106208]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 1 February 2000]: Services for the diagnosis and treatment of leishmaniasis, as for other imported infections, are provided by and through the patient's general practitioner. If the patient has a mild form of the disease, this would be managed by the GP. If, however, the patient has a more severe form of the disease, the GP would refer the patient to a hospital specialist. Consultants in dermatology, infectious diseases or tropical diseases would be appropriate, depending on the clinical presentation and local circumstances.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1999, Official Report, column 465W, on departmental research contracts, if he will (a) state total expenditure on research let by his Department since May 1997 and (b) list the titles of all research contracts let by his Department during 1999 and costing £20,000 or more, stating what is the value of each contract, and in each case whether the contract included (i) departmental veto over publication of the research results, (ii) departmental control over the date of publication of the research and (iii) a requirement that the final research results incorporate departmental amendments. [107095]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 1 February 2000]: Since 1997 the total expenditure on research contracts let by the Department through departmental and National Health Service research and development budgets is as follows:

Policy Research Programme expenditure:

1997–98: £26.2 million

1998–99: £27.3 million

NHS research and development programme expenditure on directly commissioned projects:

1997–98: £75,847,000

1998–99: £73,437,000

NHS research and development programme expenditure on allocations to NHS providers:

1997–98: £350,019,000

1998–99: £350,959,000.

Information about individual research contracts is collectable only at disproportionate cost.

Details of medical and related research funded or supported by the Department can be found in the National Research Register. This is available in the Library and in most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm.

Copies of model contracts for the Department's Policy Research Programme and the NHS research and development programme are in the Library.

Health Insurance

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the percentage of total labour costs of firms in (a) the automobile sector and (b) the insurance sector attributable to providing health insurance cover for their employees, in (i) the United States, (ii) Canada, (iii) France and (iv) Germany. [107802]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Denis MacShane, dated 2 February 2000:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question regarding the percentage of total labour costs attributable to providing health insurance cover for various countries.

The information you requested is not available from the ONS. The Statistical Office of the European Communities publishes data for Germany and France, although it should be noted that the latest available data relate to 1992. Information for the United States and Canada can be obtained from the US Bureau of Labour Statistics and Statistics Canada respectively.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council what consideration underlay the decision to appoint Pricewaterhouse to headhunt for possible members of the Appointments Commission; and if she will make a statement. [107350]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government decided to use recruitment consultants to assist in the process of identifying candidates for the House of Lords Appointments Commission in order to ensure that the widest possible field of candidates was considered, and to benefit from their professional expertise in managing the process. PricewaterhouseCoopers executive search and selection were appointed after four firms were invited to tender for the project. The whole process is being done under the principles of the Commissioner for Public Accounts, and will also include public advertisements. The actual appointments will be made by a selection panel.

TREASURY

Unemployment (City of Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many unemployed (a) male and (b) female 16 to 24-year-olds in the City of Durham (i) had never been employed and (ii) had been unemployed for more than a year, in each of the last five years; and what were the highest levels of unemployment recorded in Durham in each of the last five years for (a) 16 to 24 year olds and (b) those aged 25 years. [108012]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 2 February 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on unemployed people in Durham.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is in the ONS's main source of labour market data on individuals. The measure of unemployment derived from the LFS is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO). The LFS can provide information on people aged 16 to 24 who have never been employed and people aged 16 to 24 who have been unemployed for more than a year. However, no LFS data on people who have never been employed and the length of ILO unemployment are available below county level.

As with any sample survey, Labour Force Survey estimates are subject to sampling variability. The smaller the estimate, the larger the variability relative to the size of the estimate and even for Durham county such analyses will not provide reliable estimates.

The ONS also publishes figures on the number of people who are claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance Credits. This is published monthly and is known as the claimant count.

Detailed information for the City of Durham constituency on claimant count levels and monthly analyses of computerised claims by specific age and duration bands can be obtained from the Nomis database at the House of Commons Library. The claimant count has been on a downward trend in each of the last five years in the City of Durham constituency. The highest point during this period was in January 1996.

LINK

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make representations to the LINK board meeting on 29 February, regarding access to financial services; [107730]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact that LINK ATM surcharging will have on access to financial services for people on low incomes. [107729]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is for banks in the first instance to resolve how they charge their customers for the use of ATM machines in a competitive environment. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has commissioned a review of banking competition under Don Cruickshank. When it reports the Government will consider carefully whether any action is required.

Credit Ratings

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the credit rating of companies seeking to tender for services provided by his Department is checked before the contract is awarded. [107741]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Treasury decisions on an individual bidding company's financial standing take account of latest available audited and interim accounts and any other relevant published information including credit and debt rating. These checks are undertaken on contracts where early termination would place a financial and operational risk on the Department.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often the credit rating of companies supplying services to his Department is checked. [107749]

Mr. Andrew Smith: During the period of the contract, the Treasury will carry out checks of this nature only if it has reason to believe that any of its contractors may be in financial trouble.

Debt Reduction

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those countries with whom he has recently discussed help from the United Kingdom as to the possible reduction of their debt burden. [108017]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer and Secretary of State for International Development announced on 21 December 1999 that the UK will be providing 100 per cent. relief on the debts of all the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries, once the country qualifies for relief under the HIPC initiative. No extra conditions will apply.

Uganda will be one of the first countries that will benefit from the extra relief to be provided by the UK. In a meeting with the Chancellor and Secretary of State for International Development just before Christmas, the Ugandan Treasury Secretary told them that the extra money will go towards meeting his country's commitment to universal primary education and towards lowering the pupil:teacher ratio in schools from today's level of 100:1 to 50:1 in 2003.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what help is he able to offer those industries that are intensive energy users but are presently outside the eligibility criteria to enter into a negotiated agreement under the climate change levy. [107937]

Mr. Timms: Those sectors outside the scope of the negotiated agreements stand to benefit from a number of modifications to the design of the climate change levy announced by the Chancellor in the Pre-Budget Report, including the lower overall rates of the levy; the exemptions for electricity generated from 'new' forms of renewable energy and in 'good quality' combined heat and power plants; and the trebling of support for energy efficiency measures under the levy package.

Tobacco Revenues

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if spending on the NHS during the period of the second Comprehensive Spending Review, excluding any increases in spending that result from real terms increases in revenues from tobacco, will not be cut in real terms. [107983]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Decisions on expenditure plans for 2001–02 to 2003–04 will be taken in due course as part of the current spending review. The Government are however committed to increase NHS spending in real terms, year on year.

Reserves

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the profits were from the Bank of England's investment of the reserves net of management charges for the last five years; [106799]

(2) what the cost was of holding the Government's foreign currency reserves in the last five years. [106798]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The 1997–98 accounts of the Exchange Equalisation Account, the account at the Bank of England which holds the United Kingdom's foreign currency and gold reserves, were published on 26 January. These accounts were the first ever accounts of the Exchange Equalisation Account to be published. The accounts for 1998–99 will be published once the National Audit Office has completed its audit.

The Treasury has a PSA target to:

"minimise the cost of holding the Government's foreign currency reserves, while reducing risk".

A report on performance against this target will be published in the Treasury's Departmental Report to be published later this year.

IT Staff Salaries

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the differentials between the salaries of IT staff in the (a) public sector and (b) private sector on the efficiency of public sector IT procurement. [106585]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This is one of a range of issues currently being examined by the Cabinet Office's review of major IT projects. We are also taking careful account of it in setting up the Office of Government Commerce.

Tax Credits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of (a) families with dependent children, (b) non-pensioner couples with no children, (c) non-pensioner single people, (d) pensioner couples and (e) single pensioners who have gross annual income of less than £10,000 and who (i) pay tax and (ii) do not pay tax, if receipts of tax credits are treated as negative taxation. [103551]

Dawn Primarolo: Treating the Working Families Tax Credit as negative taxation impacts only upon category (a): families with dependent children. It is estimated that in 2000–01 there will be 270,000 families with dependent children with gross annual income of less than £10,000 that include a taxpayer. Of those families about 200,000 will receive Working Families Tax Credit that exceeds the total tax liability of the family. For 2000–01 the numbers affected in the other categories, and the numbers in receipt of other tax credits such as the Disabled Person's Tax Credit are too small, or the amounts involved are too small, for reliable estimates to be made.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press releases were issued by the Treasury in each year from 1995 to the present. [106802]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of Treasury press notices in each year from 1995 to the present is as follows:

	Number
1995	186
1996	187
1997	184
1998	244
1999	239
2000	[1]8

SOCIAL SECURITY

Nursing Home Residents (Income Support)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many residents of residential and nursing homes (a) in total, (b) aged 65 years or over and (c) aged under 65 years, who have preserved rights to income support, are being supported by local authorities. [104063]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available centrally.

State Second Pension

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measure of average earnings will be used to update the lower earnings threshold for the state second pension. [107670]

Mr. Rooker: The Low Earnings Threshold will be revalued annually in line with increases in national average earnings, normally measured by the Average Earnings Index (All Employees) as published by the Office for National Statistics.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the method used to calculate holiday entitlement for people in receipt of Invalid Care Allowance. [107653]

Mr. Bayley: We recognise the importance for carers of being able to take a break from their caring responsibilities. A carer in receipt of Invalid Care Allowance is therefore able to retain entitlement during short breaks not exceeding four weeks in any 26 without losing benefit.

The calculation of this entitlement involves the use of a rolling period of 26 weeks. Each week of the proposed break is assessed to see if it falls within a period of 26 weeks in which no more than four weeks' break will have occurred in total.

Neighbour Nuisance

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to use benefit sanctions to tackle the problem of neighbour nuisance. [107484]

Angela Eagle: We have made it clear that there is no unconditional right to benefits. Rights must be matched by responsibilities. We are looking at these issues across the board, but no announcements are imminent.

Pensioner Incomes

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the age at which the income of the two pensioners in examples 1 and 2 of page 122 of the "Opportunities for All" report will be less than the Minimum Income Guarantee; and what are his assumptions about increases in (a) the basic state pension, (b) the state second pension and (c) the Minimum Income Guarantee after 2051. [107373]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

The time taken and age at which each of the two illustrative examples detailed would fall onto the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG).

	Example 1	Example 2
Time taken to fall onto the MIG following retirement (years)	9	12
Age when example falls onto the MIG	74	77

Note:
These results have been estimated assuming:
State second pension starts in 2002 and is uprated in line with prices once in payment;
Basic state pension is uprated in line with prices;
Minimum Income Guarantee is uprated in line with earnings from 1999 onwards;
Earnings are assumed to grow 1.5 per cent. faster than prices in line with GAD projections;
A person who works for a full working life begins work at age 16, works for 49 years and retires at age 65.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Barristers (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what words form the declaration required as a condition of appointment to the Senior Bar in Northern Ireland; and what is his assessment of the compatibility of this requirement with (a) the Fair Employment Act, (b) the Good Friday Agreement and (c) UN Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers. [107826]

Mr. Lock: Those called as Queen's Counsel in Northern Ireland are required to make the same declaration as is required of Queen's Counsel in England and Wales:

"I, N., do sincerely promise and declare that I will well and truly serve Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second and all whom I may lawfully be called upon to serve in the office of one of Her Majesty's Counsel learned in the Law according to the best of my skill and understanding."

The second part of the question relates to a matter currently before the High Court in Northern Ireland, and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment at this stage.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many individuals have been called to the Bar in Northern Ireland in each of the past 10 years; and what was the perceived community affiliation of the intake in each year. [107824]

Mr. Lock: I understand from the Inn of Court of Northern Ireland that the numbers of individuals called to the Bar of Northern Ireland were:

Year	Term	Number called	Total
1989	Hilary	4	—
	Trinity	6	—
	Michaelmas	24	34
1990	Trinity	7	—
	Michaelmas	26	33
1991	Trinity	9	—
	Michaelmas	22	31
1992	Hilary	2	—
	Trinity	1	—
	Michaelmas	22	25
1993	Hilary	3	—
	Trinity	7	—
	Michaelmas	23	33
1994	Hilary	1	—
	Trinity	2	—
	Michaelmas	36	39
1995	Trinity	4	—
	Michaelmas	21	25
1996	Hilary	7	—
	Trinity	6	—
	Michaelmas	33	46
1997	Hilary	7	—
	Trinity	3	—
	Michaelmas	43	53
1998	Hilary	14	—
	Michaelmas	36	50
1999	Hilary	13	—
	Michaelmas	43	56

Information on the perceived community backgrounds is irrelevant and is not collected.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the dates of correspondence exchanged since January 1997 with the Northern Ireland Lord Chief Justice concerning appointments to the Senior Bar; and if he will place copies of correspondence in the Library. [107825]

Mr. Lock: This relates to a matter currently before the High Court in Northern Ireland and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment or to provide copies as sought at this stage.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out the procedures for nomination, selection and appointment of the Senior Bar in Northern Ireland; how many appointments have been made in each of the last 10 years; and what was the perceived community affiliation of the intake in each year. [107823]

Mr. Lock: The process of appointing Queen's Counsel relates to a matter currently before the High Court in Northern Ireland and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment. The nomination and selection process is one of open application, the applications received being considered alongside the views of consultees who comprise judges, the Northern Ireland Bar and Law Society of Northern Ireland. Selections are made on merit.

The number of Queen's Counsel appointed in Northern Ireland in the last 10 years are:

Year	Number
1989	8
1990	—
1991	—
1992	—
1993	10
1994	—
1995	—
1996	13
1997	—
1998	—
1999	10

The call of members of other Inner Bars and calls Honoris Causa are not included.Information on the perceived community background of appointees is irrelevant and is not collected.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultation procedures were adopted following publication of the Elliott report in May 1997; what responses were made; and what conclusion he reached. [107827]

Mr. Lock: This relates to a matter currently before the High Court in Northern Ireland and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment at this stage.

Community Legal Service

Angela Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor intends to publish directions to the Legal Services Commission setting priorities for funding in respect of the Community Legal Service. [108671]

Mr. Lock: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor wrote yesterday to Peter Birch CBE, Chairman-Designate of the Legal Services Commission, enclosing three directions about priorities for funding, the scope of the Community Legal Services Fund and particular budgets within the Fund. Copies of these directions have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Development Scheme

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants have been offered under the Agriculture Development Scheme. [108570]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased that offers of some £2 million in marketing grants have been made under the Agriculture Development Scheme. Around 35 per cent. of the money will benefit the pig sector directly and some of the other projects directed at the livestock sector will also help pig producers. Overall, we are assisting a wide range of sectors and regions. The following organisations have been offered grant aid.

Sector	Lead organisation	Project
Pigs	Assured British meat	National assurance database information and administration system (pigs module)

CABINET OFFICE

Anti-drugs Co-ordinator

7. Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she last met the anti-drugs co-ordinator. [106591]

8. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent discussions she has had with the anti-drugs co-ordinator on the incidence of drugs use. [106593]

Marjorie Mowlam: I hold regular meetings with the Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator to discuss all aspects of the Government's anti-drug strategy.

Investors in People

10. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made in achieving Government targets on securing Investors in People status for all Government Departments. [106596]

Mr. Ian McCartney: 88 per cent. of civil servants now work in organisations that are recognised as Investors in People. This is a significant achievement and Departments and Agencies should be congratulated on their progress.

Cannabis

11. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment she has made of the advantages and disadvantages of establishing a royal commission on the law relating to cannabis. [106598]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Establishing such a Royal Commission would pre-suppose that some change in the law is necessary or desirable. That is not this Government's belief and we have no intention of legalising any controlled drug.

Social Exclusion Unit

12. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress is being made in implementing the Social Exclusion Unit's report on truancy. [106599]

Marjorie Mowlam: Good progress in implementing the Social Exclusion Unit's report is being made and as part of this process the Department for Education and Employment recently launched its strategy document "Tackling Truancy Together" for consultation. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for School Standards and I am monitoring progress both within DfEE, across Whitehall and beyond.

13. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the work of the Social Exclusion Unit. [106600]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Social Exclusion Unit was established in December 1997. Since then it has produced five reports and action plans on subjects as diverse as rough sleeping and teenage pregnancy.

The Prime Minister will announce a new work programme for the Unit in the summer of 2000, once its current project to develop a national strategy for neighbourhood renewal is completed.

18. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the work of the Social Exclusion Unit. [106606]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Social Exclusion Unit was established in December 1997. Since then it has produced five reports and action plans on subjects as diverse as rough sleeping and teenage pregnancy.

The Prime Minister will announce a new work programme for the Unit in the summer of 2000, once its current project to develop a national strategy for neighbourhood renewal is completed.

Older People

14. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the Better Government for Older People initiative. [106601]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Better Government for Older People programme is continuing to make good progress towards delivering the improved public services that older people deserve.

Those involved in its 28 pilot projects, which involve nearly 300 partner organisations, are making an invaluable contribution to this work. We have decided to extend the programme until December 2000 to make sure its lessons are widely learned across the public sector.

Drugs (Zero Tolerance)

15. Dr. Tonge: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment she has made of the progress in implementing the zero tolerance policy towards drugs. [106602]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are making good progress towards the tough targets set out in its strategy document, "Tackling Drugs to build a better Britain".

Clearly there is much to do, but a great deal of work is already under way. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary recently announced details of how £20 million has been allocated for the expansion of Arrest Referral Schemes designed to get drug misusers into treatment. This is in addition to the £217 million allocated to anti-drugs work as part of the last spending review.

Regulatory Impact Assessments

16. Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the Bills for which a regulatory impact assessment has been made. [106604]

Mr. Stringer: I refer my hon. Friend to the twice-yearly Command Papers, titled "Regulatory Impact Assessments", which are placed in the Libraries of the House. A regulatory impact assessment must be carried out whenever proposed regulations will have significant costs for business, charities or voluntary organisations.

Statements

17. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to her oral statement of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 759, on oral statements to the House, if she will make a statement on Government policy on giving information to the press before making statements to the House. [106605]

Mr. Stringer: As the Ministerial Code makes clear, when Parliament is in session, Ministers will want to bear in mind the desire of Parliament that the most important announcements of Government policy should be made, in the first instance, to Parliament.

GM Crops

19. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent representations she has received from interested parties on the co-ordination of Government policies on genetic modification of agricultural crops; and if she will make a statement. [106607]

Marjorie Mowlam: A number of outside organisations have written to me seeking meetings, and I am in the process of meeting a number of them. These include environmental groups, consumer bodies and industry representatives.

Regulations

20. Mr. Forth: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many regulations have been introduced and how many abolished since 1 May 1997. [106608]

Mr. Stringer: It is the Government's policy to introduce regulation only when really necessary and to ensure that it imposes the minimum burden to achieve its objective. The Government also insists that a regulatory impact assessment is carried out whenever regulations are likely to have an impact on business, charities or voluntary organisations. The number of regulatory impact assessments is recorded in twice-yearly Command Papers which are placed in the Libraries of the House. Listing the absolute number of regulations made is meaningless. If one assumes that the term regulations means Statutory Instruments, the total would include all those with no impact on business, every deregulatory order, every routine air traffic and road closure order, as well as those that have lapsed and those laid in order to revoke existing Statutory Instruments.

Special Advisers

21. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the increase in the cost of special advisers since May 1997. [106609]

Mr. Stringer: The estimated cost of Special Advisers in 1999–2000 is £4.0 million. The increase in cost is the result of strengthening the centre to ensure a firm political focus and greater co-ordination in the work of this Administration.

Electronic Government Services

22. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will publish the performance tables for each Department for the electronic delivery of Government services. [106610]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier reply of 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 276W. The Autumn 1999 monitoring report is available at the Central Information Technology Unit website at www.citu.gov.uk.

Civil Service Fast Stream

23. Mr. Healey: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the fast stream development programme for civil servants. [106611]

Mr. Stringer: The fast stream development programme is an annual scheme to recruit high calibre graduates into the Civil Service. In line with the Modernising Government agenda, it aims to recruit candidates who are the most able and who reflect the full diversity of our society. The fast stream selection process will come under direct Civil Service management from December 2001.

Candidates are selected by a combination of tests, assessment centre and interview. The programme offers a training and development package leading to early promotion.

The scheme will play an important role in helping to fulfil parts of the "Modernising Government" agenda which lays down key steps for the development of a Civil Service for the 21st Century. Work is continuing to ensure that fast stream entrants reflect the full diversity of society and the scheme is reviewing and developing its recruitment criteria to reflect current and future needs. This will ensure that the most able people meet the Civil Service's need for leadership, management and service delivery as well as traditional policy skills.

The Civil Service fast stream development programme is going through further changes. The former Secretary of State for the Cabinet Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), in response to a parliamentary question from my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Mr. Brown) about the future arrangements for recruitment to the Civil Service fast stream development programme, announced on 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 232:

> A review of the operation of the recruitment process took place during 1998. As a result I have decided in principle that, on the expiry of the current contracts, the selection stages of the process will return to direct Civil Service management. I expect specialist services including advertising, publicity, response handling and psychology support to continue to be supplied by the private sector following competitive tender.

Direct Civil Service management will begin from December 2001. The aims of this change are to develop the scheme's ability to recruit the best people for the job, improve candidate care and improve the image of the Civil Service as an employer.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Senior Salaries Review Body

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the report and recommendations of the Review Body on Senior Salaries on the Greater London Authority. [107864]

Mr. Prescott: The Review Body on Senior Salaries report on the initial pay, expenses, pensions and severance arrangements for the Mayor of London and members of the London Assembly is published today. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House. The Prime Minister and I are grateful to the Chairman and Members of the Review Body for their work.

The main recommendations of the Review Body with regard to pay are:

Salary	£
Mayor	84,385
Deputy Mayor	51,743
Assembly member	34,438

The Review Body recommended that pay levels should be uprated annually beginning on 1 April 2000 by the same percentage as the average of the movements in the mid-points of the nine senior civil service pay bands below permanent secretary and that an independent review of pay levels should take place in 2002 and then at intervals of three years.

The Review Body also recommended that a Mayor of London, Deputy Mayor or an Assembly member who is also an MP, an MEP or a salaried Office-Holder in the House of Lords should receive an abated salary in respect of his or her GLA role equal to one third of the relevant GLA salary; the Mayor, Deputy Mayor and Assembly members' pension arrangements should be provided through the Local Government Pension Scheme; and that severance payments should be made only to the Deputy Mayor, and only if he or she loses that role other than at an election. The Review Body also expressed the view that members of the Authority should receive travel and subsistence payments similar to those available to staff of the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

The Government have decided to accept the Review Body's recommendations on pay, expenses, pensions and severance arrangements in full. We recognise that it has been extremely difficult to evaluate the weight of responsibilities for unique positions which do not yet exist. In particular, the Review Body concluded that there was currently insufficient evidence about additional responsibilities of the Chair of the Assembly and of membership of a functional body to reach a view on whether there should be additional remuneration for these roles.

The Government acknowledge the uncertainties, and have therefore decided to invite the Review Body to carry out an early review of remuneration and pensions. This review would begin nine months after the new Authority became fully operational. It would therefore progress on a basis of fact and experience rather than on the inevitable current basis of anticipation of roles and responsibilities. The statutory guidance on ethical standards, issued under section 66 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999, will require the Authority to have due regard to the SSRB's recommendations in deciding future salaries.

Game Managers and Pigeon Fanciers

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to address the concerns of game managers and pigeon fanciers with respect to predation of game birds and racing pigeons by birds of prey; and if he will make a statement. [108604]

Mr. Mullin: The issues arising from the recovery of some bird of prey populations and their impact on game bird and moorland management and on racing pigeons have been addressed by the UK Raptor Working Group.

This group, jointly chaired by my Department and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, and comprising experts from the fields of bird conservation, game management and pigeon racing, has funded significant research and considered information from a wide range of sources including leading authorities and relevant specialists. The group has now agreed a package of recommendations and submitted its final report to UK Ministers. Copies are available in the House Libraries.

I welcome the publication of these recommendations and hope they will help provide an integrated solution to the problems presented by birds of prey to game bird managers and pigeon fanciers. Implementation of these recommendations will of course be a matter for the devolved administrations and I will be asking English Nature for advice with respect to implementation in England.

Water Industry Act 1999

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the use of his powers under the Water Industry Act 1999. [108816]

Mr. Meacher: We have today published "Water Industry Act 1999: Delivering the Government's Objectives", which will be available in the Library of the House, or from the Department's website (www.environment.detr.gov.uk).

This document is the final part of a series of publications associated with the Water Industry Act 1999. It comprises:

guidance to the Director General of Water Services on matters he is required to take into account when approving water company's annual charges schemes

Regulations, protecting vulnerable groups, and prescribing conditions where metering is permitted, which were laid on 22 December.

responses to consultation on both the guidance and the regulations, and regulatory appraisals for each set of regulations.

The proposals in this document deliver the Government's key water charging objectives: fair and affordable water charges—particularly for vulnerable customers—and the sustainable use of water supplies and protection of the aquatic environment.

The guidance sets out the Government's approach to key water charging issues. It encourages water companies to develop charging systems that are fair and affordable, and take account of environmental considerations. Customers should expect stable and predictable bills, and charges should be transparent and closely related to services provided.

The Water Industry (Charges) (Vulnerable Groups) Regulations 1999 offer new, additional protection to customers who might face hardship affording their bills because they use large amounts of water for essential purposes and pay on a measured basis. Customers will qualify for assistance if they are in receipt of income related benefits or tax credits (Income Support, Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Working Families Tax Credit, Disabled Person's Tax Credit, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit) and either

(a) they have three dependent children under the age of 16; or

(b) they have a medical condition requiring significant extra water use (these are defined as kidney failure requiring home dialysis, abdominal stomas, desquamation, weeping skin disease and incontinence).

Customers in these circumstances will be entitled to pay the average charge for the company that supplies them, rather than their actual measured charge. This represents a significant new step to tackle water poverty.

The Water Industry Act 1999 restricts water companies' powers to impose meters on customers. However, the Government accept that metering may be acceptable in some circumstances, such as when a customer is using a large volume of water for discretionary purposes. The Water Industry (Prescribed Conditions) Regulations 1999 therefore set out conditions when companies will continue to be permitted to require customers to have water meters. These include circumstances such as automatic garden watering, automatic replenishment of a large pond or swimming pool, very large baths, high consumption showers and certain types of water softening unit. These Regulations also give the Secretary of State power to permit metering in designated areas of water scarcity. No such areas are designated at present. Any application for designation would need to be considered by the Secretary of State, consulting the Director General of Water Services, the Environment Agency and bodies representing customers in the relevant area.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many schemes in the targeted programme of trunk road improvements will start in 2000–01. [108704]

Mr. Hill: A start will be made in 2000–01 on 13 of the 37 schemes in the targeted programme of improvements announced in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England"—six more than previously planned. The acceleration of six schemes by bringing their starts forward from 2001–02 reflects our commitment to modernising the country's transport system. All the schemes in the targeted programme were assessed using the New Approach to Appraisal against our criteria of safety, environmental impact, economy, accessibility and integration.

The full list of starts now planned for 2000–01 is as follows:

A1: Willowburn-Denwick Improvement, Northumberland

A6: Great Glen Bypass, Leicestershire

A6: Clapham Bypass, Bedfordshire[1]

A11: Roudham Heath-Attleborough, Dualling, Norfolk[1]

A27: Polegate Bypass, East Sussex

A41: Aston Clinton Bypass, Buckinghamshire

A43: Whitfield Turn, Brackley Hatch Improvement, Northants

A43: Silverstone Bypass, Northants

A43: M40-B4031 Dualling, Oxon/Northants[1]

A66: Stainburn and Great Clifton Bypass, Cumbria[1]

A500: Basford, Hough, Shavington Bypass, Cheshire[1]

A650: Bingley Relief Road, Bradford[1]

A1033: Hedon Road Improvement, Hull.

[1] Start previously planned for 2001–02.

In addition to these 13 schemes work is planned to start later this year on the privately financed Birmingham Northern Relief Road and we are at the final stages of letting the design, build finance and operate contract for improvements to the A13 in East London. Work will also start soon on widening the M2 between the A2 at Cobham and junction 4 at Rochester.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made with the secondary legislation setting out detailed arrangements for the Greater London Authority elections. [108703]

Mr. Hill: I intend to lay a number of orders and the elections rules to give effect to the following decisions.

Early voting

I shall shortly be laying the necessary secondary legislation to allow voters who wish to vote in person, but cannot do so on 4 May, to vote early. The order will provide for voting in one or two locations in each borough on 27, 28 and 29 April 2000, between 7 am and 9 pm daily. The precise locations of early voting polling stations will be publicised locally and voters will complete ballot papers in the normal way. This will be a new option, and is in addition to postal and proxy voting, which will also be available.

Elections rules

Consultation on the detailed elections rules is now complete and these will be laid shortly. As well as providing for all aspects of the running of the elections these will provide for the hours of polling to be between 7 am and 9 pm. They will also provide for the following levels of deposits and signatures for candidates.

Each Mayoral candidate will be required to gather 330 signatures—ten from each London borough and the City of London—in support of his or her candidacy. They will also be required to pay a deposit of £10,000, which would be forfeited if a candidate fails to obtain 5 per cent. of the vote.

Assembly candidates will not be required to collect signatures in support of their candidacies. In respect of deposits, there will be different arrangements for the different categories of candidate. Parties with a list of candidates, and independent candidates contesting London-wide list seats, will be required to pay a deposit of £5,000, which will be forfeited if they fail to obtain 2.5 per cent. of the vote.

Candidates contesting Assembly constituencies will pay a deposit of £1,000 which will be forfeited if they fail to obtain 5 per cent. of the vote.

Election expenses

Following consultation on the proposed limits for candidates' and third parties' election expenditure, I will lay a draft order shortly setting out the following maximum spending limits for the GLA elections:

£420,000 per mayoral candidate;

£35,000 per candidate contesting an assembly constituency;

£330,000 per party or independent candidate contesting the London-wide list.

£25,000 per third party supporting or opposing mayoral candidates;

£25,000 per third party supporting or opposing London-wide list candidates, including independent candidates; and

£1,800 per third party supporting or opposing assembly constituency candidates.

These limits will enable candidates and parties to fight effective campaigns, at either the London-wide or the constituency level.

Some political parties have expressed concern that candidates in GLA elections, in common with local elections generally, are not entitled to a free mailshot. We believe that a free London-wide mailing would be particularly vulnerable to abuse by unscrupulous candidates seeking to gain advertising at the tax payers expense for the cost of a deposit. Following the consultation exercise we have lowered the proposed limits to provide a more level playing field for less well resourced parties and independent candidates, and will allow parties with both a Mayoral candidate and a London-wide list to pay for a single election mailshot to every London household should they wish to.

The order is subject to affirmative resolution in each House of Parliament. If approved, the limits will come into force on the day after the day on which the order is made. Candidates' limits will cover any expenditure as defined in section 76 of the Representation of the People Act 1983.

Disqualification

An order will be laid in draft before each House of Parliament specifying the offices and appointments, the holders of which will be disqualified from being elected or being the Mayor or an Assembly member. This order supplements the disqualification arrangements already contained in section 21 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999 and other legislation.

We intend the GLA to be an inclusive authority, which works in partnership with other organisations on London's behalf. We are therefore keeping to a minimum those offices and appointments which a person will not be able to combine with membership of the GLA. The order will specify only those offices which are required to be or seen to be politically impartial; are with a body which will scrutinise the GLA or one of the functional bodies; or are with a body which may exercise a quasi-judicial role over the GLA or a functional body. I have today placed in the Library of the House a list of offices and appointments which will be designated in the order. Conflicts with public office, whether of interest or of time pressures, will also be covered in the statutory guidance on ethical standards to which the Authority will be required to have regard. I intend to publish this guidance shortly.

Staff Bonuses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the New Year period; what were the (a) maximum and (b) minimum bonuses paid; how many people received the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum payments; and if he will make a statement. [104666]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The total spent in DETR(Central), its agencies and associated bodies is not yet known as some payments have still to be processed. The figures in the table are provisional and are based on the additional costs incurred above the usual overtime and on call payments over the New Year period (31 December to 3 January):

DETR(Central)	3,513.35
MCA	429.45
HSE	15,727.00
Total	19,669.80

About half of this relates to on call payments for staff on standby at home. Those staff who attended worked, in general, in emergency planning rooms, IT divisions, Press Office, Private Office and building maintenance and security divisions.

In addition to this, in DETR(C) some special bonuses will be paid to staff who made a particular contribution at this time. As at 31 January, four payments have been made totalling £1,400. The following agencies did not have any staff working over the New Year period: the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre, the Rent Service, and the Vehicle Certification Agency.

The information in respect of the following agencies could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost: the Driving and Vehicle Licensing Agency, the Planning Inspectorate, Government Office, the Vehicle Inspectorate and the Highways Agency.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what measurements have been taken of discharges of materials harmful to bathing water quality from the River Ribble into the Irish sea over the last (a) 12 months, (b) 24 months and (c) 36 months; [106365]

(2) at what points along the River Ribble water quality has been tested; and what the results of these tests have been, for (a) the last 12 months, (b) the last 24 months and (c) the last 36 months. [106362]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: Water quality has been extensively tested at many points and at various times along the River Ribble and elsewhere as part of the comprehensive programme of studies into problems with compliance with the EC Bathing Water Directive along the Fylde coast. The main purpose of the programme has been to determine the inputs of faecal contamination to the area, and their patterns of dispersion and impacts on bathing waters, in order to establish the need for further improvements to the sewerage infrastructure. Measurements have also been taken to develop a water quality model of the River Ribble and its estuary. I will arrange for the Environment Agency, North West Region to send my hon. Friend a copy of their report on these issues.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent measures the European Union authorities have requested to ensure compliance with mandatory EU bathing water standards along the Fylde coast. [106367]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The EC Commission has not requested any measures additional to those under way by the Environment Agency and North West Water.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the reasons for the failure of North West Water's recent bathing water improvement schemes to raise the level of compliance with mandatory EU standards along the Fylde coast. [106364]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: Recently completed investment schemes have improved water quality in the Ribble Estuary, although these have not yet brought compliance with the EC Bathing Water Directive along the Fylde coast. The Environment Agency considers that further improvements are required to treatment and storm water management at Wigan/Skelmersdale and to stormwater management at Southport and combined sewer overflows in Preston to ensure compliance at Southport and Lytham with the EC Bathing Water Directive. The Agency is currently investigating the possibility that compliance problems in the Blackpool area are caused by contaminated groundwater from beneath the town.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions have taken place with businesses in the North West about monitoring discharges into (a) the River Ribble and (b) the Irish sea. [106361]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The Environment Agency has monitored each of the significant discharges in the area thought to impact on bathing water quality along the Fylde coast. The main focus of discussion has been on steps to reduce sewage discharges operated by North West Water but the Agency has been in contact with other dischargers where it appears that they may be implicated in the problems of compliance with the EC Bathing Water Directive.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assurances he has received from North West Water and the Environment Agency that the latest investment programme to improve bathing water quality along the Fylde coast will result in compliance with EU directive standards. [106368]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The completed improvement schemes and further planned improvements are considered necessary to ensure compliance with the EC Bathing Water Directive along the Fylde coast. Whether these works will be sufficient to ensure compliance or whether additional measures will be required will be clearer as the results of current investigations into the causes of failure become available and are assessed.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the possible contribution of animal and avian waste to bathing water quality along the Fylde coast. [106363]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The Environment Agency's current assessment is that animal and avian waste is unlikely to make a significant contribution to the overall bacterial load, in terms of compliance with the EC Bathing Water Directive. However, the Agency is undertaking further studies to refine this assessment.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent measures have been required of North West Water to ensure compliance with mandatory EU bathing water standards along the Fylde coast. [106366]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: Recent measures required of North West Water and completed in 1999 were the provision of ultra-violet disinfection in Southport, Hesketh Bank, Preesall and Preston sewage treatment works; a substantial increase in the stormwater storage associated with the Fylde tunnel; improved stormwater arrangements at Fairhaven/Lytham, Hesketh Bank, Harrowside and Preston works; and closure of the works at Hambledon with transfer of flows to Fleetwood.

Further works required as soon as possible include treatment enhancement and stormwater management at Southport and combined sewage overflows in Preston. All these measures are considered necessary to ensure bathing water compliance in the area.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with the relevant EU authorities about water quality and beach pollution in the last 12 months. [106360]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: My Department has regular and frequent contact with the EC Commission to discuss bathing water quality including progress on improving compliance along the Fylde coast with the EC Bathing Water Directive.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment has been made of the possible impact on bathing water quality along the Fylde coast of (a) agricultural runoff and (b) discharges by businesses other than North West Water into the River Ribble. [106355]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The Environment Agency estimate that the contamination load of agricultural runoff and other non-water company discharges into the River Ribble is small, in terms of compliance with the EC Bathing Water Directive, compared to discharges by North West Water. But to determine whether contamination from animals can be significant in some circumstances, studies are being undertaken to discover the geographical origin of animal faeces, including the forensic examination of washed-up material to determine the diet of the producer animal; and bacterial "fingerprinting" to determine whether there are any types characteristic of particular animal species.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures of bathing water quality have been taken at (a) Blackpool, (b) Fleetwood and (c) Thornton Cleveleys in (i) the last 12 months, (ii) the last 24 months and (iii) the last 36 months. [106358]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: All bathing waters are measured 20 times between May and September each year against the quality requirements of the EC Bathing Water Directive. Results for the bathing waters at Blackpool, Fleetwood and Cleveleys over the past three years are as follows:

Number of samples passing the mandatory coliform bacteria standards (19 or more is a pass)

	1997	1998	1999
Blackpool South	11	15	16
Blackpool Central	16	14	15
Blackpool North	18	18	16
Fleetwood	16	20	20
Cleveleys	18	20	19

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initial assessment he has made of the impact on bathing water quality on the Fylde coast of the treatment plant at Fleetwood. [106359]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The plant at Fleetwood, which treats sewage which was previously discharged untreated at several points close to the Fylde coast, was a necessary first stage of the bathing water quality improvement programme. Water quality monitoring studies by the Environment Agency show that the treated discharges from Fleetwood into the Lune Deeps have a negligible adverse impact on Fylde coast bathing waters.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions his Department has had with North West Water and the Environment Agency on enforcement of bathing water quality by the European Commission. [106356]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The Department has regular and frequent contact with North West Water and the Environment Agency on measures to ensure bathing waters in the area achieve the required EU standards.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the results are of the QSR for the Irish sea. [106357]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The Quality Status Report for the Celtic Seas (which covers the Irish Sea) is being prepared by the OSPAR Commission for the protection of the marine environment of the North East Atlantic. The Commission plans to publish it in June, along with the other four regional Quality Status Reports (on the Arctic, the North Sea and English Channel, the Bay of Biscay and the deep Atlantic) and the holistic Quality Status Report on the North East Atlantic as a whole.

Construction Industry

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many deaths were recorded in the United Kingdom construction industry in the last 12 months. [107291]

Mr. Meacher: The table shows the provisional figures for fatalities in the construction industry for 1998–99. Final figures, which should be available in May 2000, may be slightly higher because fatalities include deaths up to a year after the date of an accident.

HSE is working with the construction industry, trade unions, clients and other stakeholders to reduce the toll of accidents and ill-health through a wide range of initiatives, in particular the "Working Well Together" Campaign.

Fatalities in construction as reported to HSE and Local Authorities, 1998–99 [1]

	Number

[2] Including trainees

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of Government policies on the long-term performance and profitability of the construction industry since May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [107847]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Steadier growth in the economy and the introduction of expenditure plans that cover a full three years will free the construction industry from the damaging stop-go cycle that has so constrained its performance in the past. It will also provide a more secure base for innovation and improved profitability in the future. The Government are also encouraging the industry to radically improve its performance through implementing the recommendations of the Construction Task Force as set out in "Rethinking Construction".

It is too soon to assess what impact these initiatives are having on the long term performance and profitability of the industry. However, as a part of our drive to encourage radical change, we published last April the first set of standard, industry wide, key performance indicators (KPIs). If, as we intend, these are widely adopted by the industry they will provide an effective means of measuring progress in future.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what gross construction output as a proportion of gross domestic product was during 1998–99; and what the average was for European Union member states. [107849]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In England in 1996 (the latest year available for England), gross construction output was about 8 per cent. of gross domestic product. Comparable figures for the EU as a whole show that construction made up about 12 per cent. of gross domestic product in that year.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the annual growth of the construction industry in each of the last 10 years. [107850]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Annual growth of the construction industry in England in each of the last 10 years has been as follows:

	Percentage
1988	21.5
1989	17.2
1990	5.0
1991	–8.6
1992	–9.3
1993	–2.1
1994	7.3
1995	6.1
1996	6.8
1997	6.4
1998	7.5

A40 (Cheltenham)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his decision to refuse Gloucestershire County Council's bid for funding for a route to bypass the A40 through Cheltenham. [107563]

Mr. Hill: The Government Office for the South West wrote to Gloucestershire County Council on 16 December 1999 explaining why my Department was unable to accept the A463 Shipton Solers to Air Balloon scheme for support in the 2000–01 Local Transport Capital Settlement. The County Council has been advised to consider alternative solutions including looking at the feasibility of dealing with the safety issues by a combination of smaller scale schemes.

Alba Proteins

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the decision in the appeal by Alba Proteins against conditions imposed on their plans by Eden District Council. [107578]

Mr. Meacher: The Department published on 13 January this year a revised version of the statutory guidance relating to air pollution control from animal rendering processes: Process Guidance Note PG6/1(00)—The Processing of Animal Remains and By-Products. The parties to the Alba Proteins appeal will shortly be invited to comment on how any changes in policy, outlined in this revised guidance note, may affect the appeal. Following consideration of their comments, the Secretary of State should then be in a position to announce a decision.

Credit Ratings

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the credit rating of companies seeking to tender for services provided by his Department is checked before the contract is awarded. [107740]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Decisions on a bidding company's financial standing take account of latest available audited and interim accounts and any other relevant published information, which may include credit and debt rating. These checks are undertaken on contracts where the risk of early termination would place a financial and operational risk on my Department.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how often the credit rating of companies supplying services to his Department is checked. [107751]

Ms Beverley Hughes: During the period of a contract my Department will generally carry out checks into a company's financial standing if it has reason to believe that any of its contractors may be in financial trouble.

En Route Centre, Swanwick

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if there are sufficient air controllers trained and ready to operate the new En Route Centre at Swanwick from the date of opening. [108029]

Mr. Mullin: NATS has carried out detailed planning of its requirements for air traffic controllers and the transitional arrangements for training controllers on the new system. NATS is confident that it will have sufficient appropriately trained and validated controllers to operate the new centre from the date of its opening.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the exact date on which the National Air Traffic Services facility at Swanwick will open. [108024]

Mr. Mullin: NATS continues to work towards the introduction into operational service of the New En-Route Centre in the winter of 2001–02.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the National Air Traffic Services at Swanwick will be fully operational at the time of its opening. [108028]

Mr. Mullin: Yes, the New En-Route Centre will be fully operational at the time of its opening.

Air Accidents Investigation Branch

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many recommendations of the Air Accidents Investigation Branch have been implemented in the last 10 years. [108033]

Mr. Mullin: The recommendations of the Air Accidents Investigation Branch are in a variety of formats, including suggestions that reviews or research be carried out: for this reason there is no standard definition of whether a recommendation has been implemented or not. The Civil Aviation Authority has recorded its responses to those recommendations addressed to the Authority in terms of "fully accepted", "partially accepted" and "not accepted". Since 1 January 1990, 473 recommendations to the Authority have been fully or partially accepted and 66 not accepted.

It is not possible to give comparable information in respect of those safety recommendations addressed over the last 10 years to other organisations, such as foreign aviation authorities, as they may respond in a variety of ways. The CAA has agreed that, in future, its annual Progress Report on safety recommendations addressed to the Authority should include such information as is available on actions taken by other bodies in response to safety recommendations, in order to provide the public with a more complete picture of progress on all AAIB safety recommendations.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many recommendations made by the Air Accident Investigation Branch relate to the Manchester 737 accident. [108034]

Mr. Mullin: The Air Accidents Investigation Branch's report on the accident to the Boeing 737, G-BEJL, at Manchester Airport on 22 August 1985 was published as Aircraft Accident Report 8/88 on 13 March 1989; it contained 31 safety recommendations.

Aircraft Inspections

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many 737 aircraft have been inspected by independent inspectors. [108027]

Mr. Mullin: Civil Aviation Authority Surveyors inspect selected aircraft each year in accordance with a policy, and associated programme, published in Airworthiness Notice No. 30 (CAA Aircraft Survey Programme—All United Kingdom Registered Aircraft). This survey programme is independent of the operators' inspections carried out as part of the scheduled maintenance programme.

In the year ending 1999, 77 Boeing 737 aircraft were surveyed by CAA.

Air Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many aircraft, operating on behalf of United Kingdom airlines, flying for hire and reward and not on the United Kingdom register flew into and out of British airspace in 1999. [108079]

Mr. Mullin: During 1999 UK airlines leased 48 foreign registered aircraft for planned periods, varying in length from less than one week up to 12 months. Of these, 43 were leased with crew. In the same year, foreign registered aircraft carried out 249 unplanned substitution flights on behalf of UK carriers whose own aircraft became temporarily unavailable.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Safety Regulation Group of the CAA will publish guidelines on wiring and flight fire. [108025]

Mr. Mullin: The Civil Aviation Authority and other accredited UK and international bodies have published requirements and guidelines concerning aircraft wiring and the prevention of in-flight fire and smoke for many years.

The UK airworthiness codes already prescribe mandatory requirements for electrical wiring design and installation which are intended to prevent the aircraft as whole being put at risk in the event of wiring faults or serious malfunction of the electrical system or any connected equipment. In particular, there is a requirement that wiring must not be able to create a fire or smoke hazard under temporary or continuous fault conditions. Demonstration of compliance with these requirements is required for all aircraft. Also, British Standards Institute and European aeronautical cable specifications and standards define flammability and toxicity requirements for aircraft wiring, as well as defining standardised methods of testing aircraft wire.

In addition to the mandatory requirements, CAA have also published guidelines on electrical wiring and electrical protection. For example, the CAA Civil Aircraft Airworthiness Information and Procedures (CAP562) contain instructions on inspection and testing of electrical circuits, installation and maintenance of electrical cables, protection against electrostatic discharge, care and maintenance of electrical power supplies, electrical cable failure and procedures for resetting thermal circuit breakers.

These requirements and guidelines are well established and well known throughout the UK aviation industry. In addition, the CAA proposes to submit to the Joint Aviation Authorities by September 2000 a consolidated version of its established guidelines concerning aircraft wiring and the prevention of in-flight fire and smoke, for promulgation throughout the JAA member states.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many instances of pressure on commercial pilots to lower safety standards have been registered in the confidential reporting system in the last 12 months. [108031]

Mr. Mullin: The UK Confidential Human Factors Incident Reporting Programme (CHIRP) is run by the CHIRP Charitable Trust. The January 2000 edition of CHIRP's publication "Feedback" contains a "Key Word analysis" of reports received in 1999, which indicates that the key words 'commercial pressure' appeared in 7 per cent. of the 141 reports received that year in the flight deck category. The analysis notes that in view of the voluntary nature of the reporting process, the results have no statistical significance.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to ensure that rudders of UK-registered 737 aircraft are fault free. [108026]

Mr. Mullin: The United States' Federal Aviation Administration is the regulatory authority responsible for overseeing the safe design of Boeing aircraft and for issuing information necessary to maintain their continued airworthiness. The Federal Aviation Administration has issued Airworthiness Directives covering both inspections of the Boeing 737 rudder system as well as revisions to flight crew operating procedures. These directives are intended to reduce the likelihood of possible rudder system faults compromising the aircraft's safety.

The United Kingdom Civil Aviation Authority requires that any Federal Aviation Administration directives applicable to Boeing 737 aircraft are complied with by UK operators and carries out regular surveys to monitor, and if necessary, enforce compliance. Although the Authority reserves the right to vary Federal Aviation Administration directives for the UK fleet, it has had no cause, to date, to impose additional requirements with respect to the Boeing 737 rudder system.

Helicopter Inspections

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is a requirement for helicopter inspections to be carried out by operations inspectors who are trained helicopter pilots; how many operations inspectors are trained helicopter pilots; and if he will make a statement. [108032]

Mr. Mullin: There are no international standards governing the qualifications of civil aviation authority inspectors, but the International Civil Aviation Organisation "Manual of Procedures for Operations Inspection, Certification and Continued Surveillance" recommends that to carry out a flight inspection of an aircraft, an inspector should be qualified in that type of aircraft.

In the United Kingdom, all helicopter flight inspections, together with technical evaluations of the helicopter, equipment, and operation are undertaken by Civil Aviation Authority Flight Operations Inspectors who possess a current Airline Transport Pilots Licence (Helicopters), and have had considerable commercial operating experience often including management or training duties. Not only are proficiency checks undertaken, but regular line flying duties in a variety of roles are carried out by all helicopter Flight Operations Inspectors.

The CAA has 13 specialist helicopter Flight Operations Inspectors.

There are some aspects of helicopter operations which can be audited or checked by suitably trained Inspecting Staff, who nevertheless do not hold a professional helicopter pilots licence. For example examination of pilots duty hours and training records would not necessarily require professional piloting expertise in order to evaluate their validity and integrity.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the expenditure on (a) staff and (b) office accommodation of each of the regional development agencies. [107942]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The planned expenditure for 1999–2000 for each of the Regional Development Agencies on staff and on accommodation are as follows:

Regional Development Agency	Staff	Accommodation
North West Development Agency	4,400,000	500,000
One North East	4,388,000	649,000
Yorkshire Forward	5,629,000	929,000
Advantage West Midlands	2,979,000	813,000
East Midlands Development Agency	3,396,000	1,135,000
East of England Development Agency	2,975,000	285,000
South West of England Regional Development Agency	4,147,000	2,321,000
South of England Development Agency	2,846,000	1,269,000

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what budget is available to the regional development agencies for implementing their sustainable development programmes. [107944]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) have not been given specific budgets to implement sustainable development policies. The RDAs have a statutory duty to contribute to the achievement of sustainable development in the UK, and it is integral to their Regional Strategies and action plans. The RDAs' contribution to sustainable development will be delivered through the implementation of these plans, and of their programmes and projects.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what timetable he has given the regional development agencies for their contributions to an integrated transport system in the regions. [107940]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) have a keen interest in integrated transport issues in their regions. They are providing an important input into the regional transport strategies which are being prepared as part of the Regional Planning Guidance (RPG). The timetable for the preparation of RPG varies by region.

The regional planning bodies are also considering the transport implications of RDAs' regional strategies. Similarly, the regional transport strategies should inform and assist the RDAs in the implementation of their own Strategies.

RDAs have also been invited to feed their ideas on integrated transport into the 10-year plan for investment in transport, currently being developed by my Department.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that the regional development agencies deliver their plans for sustainable development on time. [107943]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) were not required to develop specific sustainable development plans. The RDAs' contribution to sustainable development is integral to their regional strategies and action plans, and will be delivered through the implementation of these plans, and of their programmes and projects.

The Government will shortly be issuing guidance on Regional Development Sustainable Development Frameworks which will be high level vision statements for sustainable development in the regions. The RDAs will play a key role in producing the frameworks but will not take the lead.

Local Government

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 145W, on local government, what meetings he and his ministerial colleagues have had with the New Local government Network on the Government's modernisation agenda. [108380]

Ms Armstrong: Ministers have met the New Local Government Network on a number of occasions. A range of topics on the Government's modernisation agenda have been discussed.

Home Improvement Agencies

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the awarding of section 169 grant for home improvement agencies. [108219]

Mr. Mullin: Grant is payable to local authorities under section 169 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to support the running costs of home improvement agencies operating in their areas. My Department is currently considering authorities' applications for the renewal of grant in 2000–01, and will announce the allocations as soon as possible.

Bournemouth International Airport

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how long the Government Office of the South West took to decide whether or not to call in the planning application submitted by Bournemouth International Airport for a new passenger terminal; and if he will make a statement. [108340]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The planning application which Bournemouth International Airport submitted to Christchurch Borough Council on 28 November 1997 was referred to the Government Office for the South West on 21 July 1999. The application was called in for the Secretary of State's own determination, after careful consideration of all the issues, on 20 December 1999.

Planning Applications

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the performance of the Government Office of the South West against the target of reaching 80 per cent. of decisions on whether or not to call in planning applications within three weeks and 100 per cent. of cases within seven weeks in the last 12 months. [108339]

Ms Beverley Hughes: During 1999 the Government Office for the South West issued 85 per cent. of decisions on whether or not to call in such applications within three weeks, and 88 per cent. within the secondary target of seven weeks.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many decisions on whether or not to call in planning applications were reached after more than seven weeks since May 1997. [108338]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The total number of decisions for 1998 and 1999 is 294. Prior to 1998, the information was not collated on computer and, as a result, the figure for 1997 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his latest estimate of the number of people sleeping rough in England. [108341]

Ms Armstrong: On 15 December 1999 the Government published their latest estimate of the number of people sleeping rough in England. This estimate showed that, as at June 1999, there were 1,633 people sleeping rough in England on any one night, of which 635 were in Greater London. Copies are available from the House Libraries. We will be publishing shortly updated figures for Central London, following recent single night street counts.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108402]

Ms Armstrong: I am not able to provide this information to my right hon. Friend as correspondence between Members and Departments is treated in confidence unless the originating Member chooses to make such issues public.

PM10 Emissions

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will introduce a new target for PM10 emissions; and if he will make a statement. [108334]

Mr. Meacher: I announced the publication of the Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland on 19 January. When launching the Strategy, I explained that work is already in hand which will allow us to consider a new objective for particles towards the end of this year. This work includes consideration of particles' health effects: the costs and benefits of reducing levels of particles in air; and the effects of recent policy developments on particle levels.

Recycling

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the percentage of municipal waste that will be recycled by (a) 31 December 2001, (b) 31 December 2005 and (c) 31 December 2010. [108337]

Mr. Meacher: The Government have set a goal of at least 30 per cent. of household waste to be recycled or composted by 2010. The Government are also committed to achieving 25 per cent. as soon as possible, and hope to do this by 2005.

The latest municipal waste recycling and composting figure for England and Wales is 8 per cent. (based on 1997–98 data).

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions have been made under section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the illegal release of Schedule 9 plants. [108300]

Mr. Mullin: Prosecutions under section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 are brought by the police, and it is not a requirement for them to notify this Department of any such prosecutions. The Department has no record of any section 14 prosecutions in respect of plants.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many licences have been issued under section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for release of Schedule 9 plants. [108299]

Mr. Mullin: In the last five years one licence has been issued under section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the release of Schedule 9 plants. This was for an experimental release of Japanese knotweed, "Fallopia japonica", at a single site in Cheshire to assess the plant's competitive abilities against native weed species.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his estimate is of the cost of controlling invasive plants which are (a) scheduled and (b) unscheduled under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. [108301]

Mr. Mullin: Information about the cost of controlling invasive plants, whether scheduled or not, is not co-ordinated centrally and therefore is not available.

PPG23

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce changes to PPG23. [108336]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The waste planning elements of PPG23 have already been dealt with and published under PPG10—Planning and Waste Management (September 1999). We propose to revise the remainder of PPG23 in two stages: the first dealing with contaminated land, and the second dealing with the planning aspects of pollution control, including air quality and water quality. We aim to issue a draft for consultation on contaminated land and planning issues to coincide with the entry into force of regulations and guidance on the new regime for the management of contaminated land under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, expected in April 2000. Preparation of a consultative draft on planning and pollution control will follow the implementation of Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control (IPPC) under new Pollution, Prevention and Control Regulations, expected in May 2000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competition Commission (Media)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the proposed merger of United Newspapers and Carlton to the Competition Commission. [108182]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will decide whether or not to refer this case to the Competition Commission in the light of advice he has received from the Director General of Fair Trading. He will announce his decision as soon as is practicable.

Car Dealership Exemptions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is his policy that the exemption which allows exclusive car distribution and dealership arrangements will end in October 2002. [108177]

Dr. Howells: The provision permitting car manufacturers to operate selective and exclusive distribution networks on certain conditions, commonly known as the cars block exemption, is a European Commission Regulation (Regulation (EC) 1475/95). The European Commission is currently reviewing its operation in order to draw up an evaluation report by the end of this year. This report will in turn provide a basis for discussions involving the Commission and the member states on what, if anything, should replace the block exemption when it expires on 30 September 2002. We wish to ensure that the review is undertaken in as thorough and transparent a way as possible.

The UK Government's policy towards the block exemption will be informed by the findings of the Competition Commission about its effects upon the market for new cars in the UK.

Government Chemist

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received the 1999 report of the Government Chemist. [108814]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I have just received the third annual report of the Government Chemist and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Post Office Reform

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has appointed advisers to support the implementation of the reforms described in the White Paper on Post Office Reform. [108811]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I have appointed Deloitte & Touche to provide support for the implementation of the financial provisions set out in the Post Office White Paper (CM 4340) and Herbert Smith to provide legal advice on any commercial issues arising from implementation of the reform package. Both appointments were made after competitive tenders.

Telecommunications Act

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish proposals for reform of the Telecommunications Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [108815]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport and I propose to publish a White Paper later this year setting out the Government's proposals for reform of the framework of communications legislation. This will include proposals for changing both the Telecommunications and Broadcasting Acts as a basis for legislation when parliamentary time allows. The White Paper will accordingly be broad in its scope, covering both infrastructure and content issues. It will draw on responses to the options for reform of the broadcasting and telecommunications framework set out in the Government's June 1999 statement, "Regulating Communications: The Way Ahead" and will take full account of emerging conclusions from the current review of the European Union regulatory framework for communications. The work will be taken forward by a joint DTI/DCMS team to ensure a coherent and consistent approach to the regulation of the converging communications industries.

Oil and Gas Licensing

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce the 9th Round of Landward oil and gas licensing. [108813]

Mrs. Liddell: I am inviting applications for Petroleum Exploration and Development licences over unlicensed areas in Great Britain in the 9th Round of Landward Licensing.

The closing date for applications has been set as 5 May. I hope to be able to make an announcement about licence awards as soon as possible after that once all applications have been thoroughly considered and assessed.

While much smaller than its offshore counterpart, there is an active oil and gas industry searching for and exploiting Britain's onshore petroleum resources. The award of licences will enable companies to explore for and exploit the petroleum resources of Great Britain, which include conventional oil and gas, mine vent gas and coal bed methane trapped in coal seams.

I hope this current invitation to apply for petroleum licences will sustain the momentum created by its predecessors and allow further discoveries to be made.

Cabling

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for the laying of cable routes through the boroughs of Maidstone and Swale he has granted since May 1997; and how many applications for licences are under consideration. [107605]

Ms Hewitt: Since May 1997, 53 licences have been granted conferring statutory rights to lay cable routes in the public highway anywhere in the United Kingdom. Eight further national licence applications are under consideration.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from (a) individuals and (b) representative bodies since May 1997 relating to the laying of cable routes through (i) Kent and (ii) Maidstone and Swale Borough Council areas. [107606]

Ms Hewitt: Since May 1997, the Department has received a total of 13 representations about telecoms cabling in Kent: 11 from individuals and two from representative bodies, one of which referred to cable laying in Swale.

Departmental Expenditure and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes will be made to the departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for his Department and the Office of Fair Trading in the current financial year. [108982]

Mr. Byers: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £61,879,000 from £3,181,682,000 to £3,243,561,000. The net provision of Class IX Vote 1 will be increased by £43,696,000, which results from:

(i) an increase of £59,700,000 in the net provision for Coal Health liabilities, which has arisen exclusively from a forecast shortfall in Coal Pension Fund Surpluses which are appropriated in aid;

(ii) a reduction of £5,970,000 in the provision for the Coal Authority grant in aid;

(iii) an increase of £14,000,000 in the gross expenditure provision for the Aerospace budget in order to facilitate the repayment to Rolls Royce plc of certain amounts that have been overpaid by that company, which is offset by an increase of £14,000,000 in the appropriations in aid provision;

(iv) the transfer of £10,000,000 from the Local Competitiveness budget to the Inland Revenue (Class XVI Vote 4) for providing payroll support for new employers;

(v) the transfer of £34,000 from the Coal Health Liabilities budget to the Department of Social Security (Class XII Vote 3) to facilitate access to miners' medical records held by the Benefits Agency.

The opportunity of a Supplementary Estimate is also being taken to switch resources between certain lines of the Vote and to accommodate an increase of £300,000 in the appropriations in aid provision for the Departmental Capital budget as a result of the sale of a property, together with an equivalent increase in the gross expenditure provision for that budget.

The net provision of Class IX Vote 2 will be increased by £18,183,000, of which £16,183,000 represents the take up of End Year Flexibility entitlements as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 393W, and £2,000,000 represents a transfer of provision in respect of work commissioned of the British Antarctic Survey, which is part of the Natural Environment Research Council, by the Ministry of Defence. This is offset by an equivalent reduction in the provision for Class VI Vote 1 (Defence: operational and support costs, logistics services, and systems procurement and research). The opportunity of a Supplementary Estimate is also being taken to switch resources between certain lines of the Vote and to accommodate an increase in the amount of recovered VAT, together with an equivalent increase in costs incurred on the Vote.

The overall increase of £61,879,000 for Class IX Votes 1 and 2 will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit of Class IX Vote 7—the Office of Fair Trading—will be increased by £725,000 from £30,722,000 to £31,447,000 and the gross running costs limit will be reduced by £400,000 from £24,184,000 to £23,784,000. The increase in the Departmental Expenditure Limit results from the take up of End Year Flexibility entitlement of £725,000, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 393W. The reduction in the gross running costs limit is offset by an increase of £400,000 in the provision for "Direct Expenditure: Other current". The increase in net provision will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Fireworks

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the sale of fireworks. [108373]

Dr. Howells: The Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997 introduced comprehensive controls on the types and sizes of fireworks which can be sold to the public. I have no plans to introduce further controls on fireworks or to review the existing Regulations.

World Trade Organisation

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Scottish Executive on the impact of the Seattle round of negotiations of the World Trade Organisation on Scotland; and what consultation he has undertaken with bodies in Scotland in relation to the WTO. [107466]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 2 February 2000]: There was no agreement in Seattle among WTO member governments on the terms for the launch of a new Round of trade negotiations. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State stated that the Government's position following the Seattle Conferences in the debate in the House on 9 December 1999, Official Report, columns 1022–94. As the Government remain committed to the launch of a new comprehensive Round of trade negotiations, the existing consultation processes it has in place remains valid. This includes a consultation exercise launched last year covering all of the UK. We will continue to hold meetings with people from across the UK including business, NGOs and trade unions at both official and ministerial level. While we have received no formal representations from the Scottish Executive in relation to Seattle, we will be keeping in touch with the First Minister and DTI officials will continue to have contacts with Scottish Executive officials on the range of issues.

Lomé Convention

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent assessment he has made of the impact of WTO rules on the workings of the Lomé Convention. [107468]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 2 February 2000]: The Government are aware that the tariff preferences available under the Lomé Convention are incompatible with the rules of the WTO in so far as they discriminate between developing countries and thus require a waiver from GATT Article I. The current waiver expires in February 2000 along with the Convention itself and will have to be renewed by agreement with other WTO member governments for the preferences to continue. We strongly support the WTO, which is why we argued for a new, WTO-compatible approach to EU trade relations with Lomé countries after the current Convention expires.

Both the EU and our Lomé partners have agreed in principle with this approach, which will enter into force after a transitional period of eight years, during which time the current trade arrangements will be rolled over, and a new WTO waiver sought for this rollover period. The Government believe that this approach will give Lomé countries the best chance of integrating more fully into the multilateral trading system, thereby promoting their sustainable development and contributing to poverty eradication.

Meat Imports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the volume of imports of (a) beef and beef products and (b) lamb and lamb products in each year since 1995. [107134]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

Official Overseas Trade Statistics show that the volume of imports of (a) beef and beef products and (b) lamb and lamb products during 1995–98 and January to October 1999 were as shown in the table.

UK imports of beef and sheep meat 1995–98 and January to October 1999

Tonnes[1]

	1995	1996	1997	1998	January–October 1999

Mozambique

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much coal was imported from Mozambique in the past three years; what the transport arrangements are for coal supplied by Mozambique; and if he will make a statement. [107920]

Mrs. Liddell: Figures for 1999 as a whole are not yet available, but in the first three quarters of 1999 it is estimated that 19,000 tonnes of coal were imported into the United Kingdom from Mozambique. Prior to 1999, this information was not disclosed because the data were commercially sensitive. Customs and Excise has a duty not to disclose details relating specifically to an individual trader's activity. Information is not collected on the mode of transport used for imported coal.

Hollis Industries plc

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 208W, if he will list the reasons for the timing of his written answer informing the House of the outcome of the Hollis Inquiry. [108392]

Mr. Byers: It was a written question which I replied to as soon as possible.

TransTec

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those companies which are under investigation by officials into allegations of misuse of Government grants which were subsidiaries of (a) TransTec plc and (b) Hollis Industries. [108390]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to her on 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 206W.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if inspectors investigating TransTec plc will issue an interim report. [108388]

Mr. Byers: These are independent inspectors. They can issue an interim report if they wish.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will revise the guidance he has given to inspectors investigating TransTec plc to include allegations of misuse of his Department's grants awarded to TransTec and its subsidiary companies. [108386]

Mr. Byers: There is no need to do to so as they already have such a power.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the procedures being followed by his officials investigating allegations of misuse of Government grants awarded to TransTec plc and its subsidiaries. [108389]

Mr. Byers: The Department's inquiries are aimed at establishing the nature and extent of the allegations and the further action that should be taken in relation to those allegations.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 205W, what action he plans to take as a result of departmental interviews with Mr. Ayriss and Mr. Dickinson. [108394]

Mr. Byers: The Department's inquiries are still in progress.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will revise the guidance he has given to inspectors investigating TransTec plc to include the reorganisation of the company in 1991. [108387]

Mr. Byers: As I have already stated on 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 208W, if the independent inspectors conclude that there are matters earlier in the company's history which merit investigation then they have the power to do so.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 206W, if he will list the minuted meetings held by his Department and representatives of TransTec plc in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999. [108393]

Mr. Byers: The Company Law and Investigations Directorate has had no minuted meetings with representatives of TransTec.

Press Releases

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Government Press releases his Department issued in each year from 1995 to 1999. [106561]

Mr. Byers: The number of Press releases issued by the DTI were:

1995: 908

1996: 973

1997: 877

1998: 1,064

1999: 1,063.

Construction Industry Scheme

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the Construction Industry Scheme arrangements and their impact on the construction plant hire industry to the Director General of Fair Trading. [104891]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

The Inland Revenue is aware of the concerns of the construction plant hire industry about the Construction Industry Scheme. The Office of Fair Trading has brought the issue of alleged unfairness to the attention of the Inland Revenue. The Inland Revenue is continuing to consult with representative bodies about areas of the scheme which are causing difficulties. The Office has advised the Revenue that they will not be investigating the matter further.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes will be made to the departmental expenditure limit running costs limit for her Department in 1999–2000. [108706]

Mr. Foulkes: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, for Class VIII, Vote 1: Department for International Development, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £213,528,000 from £2,297,090,000 to £2,510,618,000. This increase is the net effect of:

Take up of end of year flexibility in respect of an underspend against EC attributed aid	105,878,000
Increase in respect of humanitarian assistance to Kosovo	58,000,000
Increase in respect of humanitarian assistance to East Timor	3,250,000
Increase in respect of payments under the Gibraltar Social Insurance Fund	13,100,000
Increase in respect of contributions to the IMF trust fund for HIPC countries	33,300,000

The increase will be a charge on the Departmental Expenditure Limit reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PRIME MINISTER

Council of Europe

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what derogations Her Majesty's Government have applied for in respect of the United Kingdom's membership of the Council of Europe and its hosting of appeal courts empowered to uphold the death penalty in other countries; and if he will make a statement. [107625]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 31 January 2000]: The United Kingdom has no derogations in respect of its membership of the Council of Europe. In cases where the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council acts as an appeal court for an independent state, including states which impose the death penalty, it does so as an integral part of the judicial structure of that state rather than of the United Kingdom. It is for these states to decide whether they wish to continue to use the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as their final court of appeal. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere in the judicial processes of another state. But this in no way implies that the United Kingdom condones the death penalty: the United Kingdom regularly raises these issues, bilaterally and with European Union partners, with such states pressing their Governments to abolish the death penalty.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Solicitor-General what proposals there are to amend the Attorney-General's Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for 1999–2000. [108702]

The Solicitor-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class V, Vote 4 (The Crown Prosecution Service) and Class V, Vote 6 (HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor), the Attorney-General's Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £6,596,000 from £335,295,000 to £341,891,000.

The Crown Prosecution Service's Running Costs Limit will be increased by £496,000 from £227,625,000 to £228,121,000. This increase is required to fund preparatory work to modernise the Crown Prosecution Service information technology infrastructure.

HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor's Running Costs Limit will be increased by £5,600,000 from £4,735,000 to £10,335,000. Appropriations in aid will also be reduced by £3,400,000. This will fund expenditure arising from the closure of the Government Property Lawyers Agency on 30 September 1999, which was announced to the House by answer to a Parliamentary Question on 11 November 1998, Official Report, column 187W.

The increases will be offset by the surrender of £589,000 of the Attorney General's Department's End Year Flexibility of £612,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 393W. £93,000 of this will be transferred to the Home Office in respect of the CPS contribution towards the cost of Integrating Business and Information Systems in the Criminal Justice System (IBIS).

The remainder of the expenditure will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

DEFENCE

Asset Sales

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the items in the National Assets Register sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies since 11 February 1999, stating in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total amount raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [104483]

Dr. Moonie: This information is currently not held in the format to link assets as shown in the National Asset Register with those assets subsequently declared as surplus to requirements and sold by the Disposal Sales Agency (DSA), and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information on surplus sales of equipment and stores is contained in the DSA's 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts held in the Library of the House. The 1999–2000 Annual Report and Accounts will be made available to the Library of the House before the summer Recess this year.

Information on the sale of Defence Estates Buildings and Lands is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Synthetic Aperture Radar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the ultra-wide band synthetic aperture radar programme; what has been the cost of the system to date; and if he will make a statement. [106158]

Dr. Moonie: I assume that the question refers to the Remote Minefield Detection System (REMIDS) Technology Demonstrator Programme, which is investigating the development of a sensor to detect minefields and mined areas for military purposes. It is using Ultra-Wide Band Synthetic Aperture Radar (UWB SAR) as a preferred technology.

Tests carried out in 1998 at short range from a ground vehicle proved the potential effectiveness of a UWB SAR in the detection role, and successfully detected plastic and metal targets representative of mine-like anti-tank ordnance. The equipment is currently in an early prototype stage and the tests did not represent a realistic environment. However, sufficient information has been generated to proceed with confidence with work on a more powerful airborne system.

Approximately £390,000 has been spent to date.

East Timor

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlay the decision to deploy the Gurkha Regiment to East Timor; and if he will make a statement. [107851]

Mr. Spellar: We decided to participate in the operation in East Timor in support of the decisions of the international community and our long standing ally and friend Australia. The decision to deploy the Gurkhas to East Timor was taken principally because they were based in Brunei and therefore already acclimatised and able to deploy quickly. Moreover, some Gurkhas also speak Malay, which is closely related to the Indonesian language and was of considerable use during the operation. The deployment of Brunei based Gurkhas also minimised potential overstretch implications.

Departmental Fees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which fees his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies collect; how much has been raised and will be raised from each of these fees from 1989–90 to 2004–05; and which of these fees count as negative expenditure. [107979]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle), gave him on 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 63W.

Walk-on Equipment (Chinook)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the value of walk-on equipment. [108054]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 2 February 2000]: I assume that the question relates to walk-on equipment which may be carried on the Chinook Mk2, such as binoculars, cameras and computers. The presence of such equipment would depend on the purpose of a particular flight and no general statement of value would be meaningful.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recommendations in the Chinook Mk2 test were made on the use of in-flight UHF transmitters and walk-on equipment; and if they were written into the CIA release. [108053]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 2 February 2000]: It was recommended that, because of the vulnerability of the automatic flight system to the Ultra High Frequency band, particular care should be taken when introducing UHF on-board transmitters to the Chinook as Special Trial Fits or walk-on equipment. The Controller Aircraft Release for the Chinook Mk2 in January 1994 stipulated that no carry-on-board equipment was cleared for use. No electronic equipment had been introduced to the aircraft by Special Trial Fit.

WRVS

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has undertaken with the AWS and WRVS regarding the line management accountability of WRVS employees; what advice he has received; what decisions have been taken; and if he will make a statement. [107840]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 2 February 2000]: The Ministry of Defence is currently engaged with the Womens' Royal Voluntary Service (WRVS) in negotiating the renewal of their contractual relationship. The WRVS, like the Service Sound and Vision Corporation, the Navy, Army and Air Force Institute and the Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Families Association (Forces Help), is a charitable-based organisation working in partnership with the Services. WRVS employees, working with the Army are line managed and appraised annually by their National Director and the Commanding Officer of the Unit to which they are assigned. The WRVS maintains a regular dialogue with the Directorate of Personal Services (Army). This process ensures that the WRVS is apprised of developments in Welfare Policy and practices in the Army.

Welfare is a function of the Chain of Command within the Army. The Army Welfare Service (AWS) fulfils only one part, albeit an important part, of the overall delivery of welfare support within the Army. They are an in-house organisation providing specialist support and advice to Army individuals, their dependent families and the Chain of Command. Their activity is focused on the LAND Command component of the Army, although they can provide a point of contact for the Army based elsewhere. Where the AWS operate alongside the WRVS, they do so in partnership, each bringing particular and complementary skills to the overall welfare delivery. There is no direct line management relationship between the AWS and the WRVS.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes will be made to his Department's budget, departmental expenditure and Operating Cost limits for 1999–2000. [108701]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have decided that, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class VI Vote 1 Defence for 1999–2000, the following changes should apply:

(a) The overall limit will increase by £584.282 million from £22,283.085 million to £22,867.367 million.

(b) The Ministry of Defence Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £582.9 million from £22,280.341 million to £22,863.241 million.

(c) The Ministry of Defence Operating Cost Limit will be increased by £778.972 million from £15,918.341 million to £16,697.313 million.

This will cover the additional expenditure incurred by UK forces on operations in Kosovo and Bosnia during the current financial year which are estimated at just under £400 million and £112 million respectively. The figure also includes full take-up of the Ministry of Defence's entitlement to End Year Flexibility of £74 million.

The Supplementary Estimates will also provide for changes in the general pattern of expenditure, including adjustments between the Defence Procurement Agency's equipment programme and the operating costs programmes.

As the increase in the Defence Expenditure Limit will be met from the Reserve, which is part of the Government's overall spending plan, it will not add to the planned total of public expenditure in the current year.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108409]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested cannot be provided as correspondence between MPs and the Department is treated in confidence unless the originating MP chooses to make such issues public.

Services Recruits

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of recruits to the (a) Royal Navy and (b) armed forces passed the initial physical fitness tests in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [107965]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Health Spending

2. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much spending on health has increased since 1 May 1997; and by what proportion of GDP health spending will increase by 2002. [106882]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Since we took office the Government have increased spending on the NHS by 10.4 per cent. in real terms. We estimate that by 2002 health spending will be around 7 per cent. of GDP.

Interest Rates

14. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the prospects for convergence between United Kingdom and European interest rates in the medium term. [106898]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Our policy is as set out in the Chancellor's October 1997 statement, including five economic tests which will have to be met before any decision to join can be taken.

28. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he has taken of the impact of the level of interest rates on the economy of the north east of England in deciding the level of public expenditure in the region. [106912]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The north east of England, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to create a platform of economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment.

Pesticides Tax

15. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he estimates he will raise from his proposed tax on the use of pesticides. [106899]

Mr. Timms: On 1 February, the Government welcomed the voluntary proposals on reducing the environmental impacts of pesticide use brought forward by the British Agrochemical Association and announced that, subject to further detailed discussions on these proposals, the Chancellor will not proceed with the introduction of a pesticides tax in the Budget.

Stamp Duty

16. Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of people who will pay extra stamp duty in 2000–01 as a result of the 1999 Budget. [106900]

Miss Melanie Johnson: About 95,000 transactions will be affected as a result of the 1999 Budget measures on stamp duty on land and property.

VAT (Building and Maintenance)

17. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the rate of VAT levied on building, renovation and maintenance work. [106901]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers have received a number of letters about the rate of VAT on building, renovation and maintenance work.

34. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the building industry on VAT on house repairs, renovation and extension work. [106920]

Dawn Primarolo: None.

Football Clubs

18. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a tax redistribution arrangement based on turnover for professional football clubs. [106902]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 December 1999, Official Report, column 297W.

Single Currency

19. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on future British membership of the single European currency. [106903]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer regularly discusses the Government's economic policy with Cabinet colleagues. The Government's position on the single currency remains as set by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement to the House of Commons on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–88.

Exchange Rate

20. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the value of sterling on trends in manufacturing output in the past 12 months. [106904]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There is strong evidence to suggest that manufacturers on the whole are coping well with the strength of sterling. Manufacturing output rose by 1.1 per cent. in the three months to November, compared to the previous three months, while export volumes have risen significantly through 1999.

Pensioners

21. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much additional expenditure has been directed exclusively to pensioners since May 1997. [106905]

Mr. Andrew Smith: From May 1997 until the financial year 2001–02, the Government have made available an additional £4 billion in real terms exclusively for pensioners. We have introduced the Minimum Income Guarantee which will be uprated by earnings growth through the remainder of this Parliament and Winter Fuel Payments of £100 per year per pensioner household. This year, we will introduce free TV licences for pensioners aged 75 and over and pensioners will receive free access to National museums in England where there are currently charges. The Government's Transport Bill contains proposals to guarantee pensioners at least half-price fares on buses in return for passes costing no more than five pounds.

NHS (Hypothecated Funding)

22. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the benefits of applying hypothecated funding to the NHS. [106906]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Chancellor announced in his Pre-Budget Report that there was a strong, ongoing health case for year-on-year real terms increases in the price of cigarettes to support the Government's objectives to reduce smoking and tackle cancer and coronary heart disease, and that any additional revenue raised from real increases in tobacco duties would in future be spent on improved healthcare.

Savings Tax (EU Directive)

23. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any circumstances in which it would be his policy to agree to the European Commission's Draft directive on the Taxation of Savings. [106907]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have made clear that there can be no agreement to any draft directive on the taxation of savings as long as it risks damaging European Union financial markets.

IR35

24. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress he is making in the introduction of IR35 changes. [106908]

Dawn Primarolo: The proposed legislation will take effect from this April. It will ensure that workers in service companies pay tax and NICs on a basis which is fair in comparison with other employees.

Debt Relief

25. Mr. Browne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the summit he held on 21 December with the churches and charities on debt relief for the world's poorest countries. [106909]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor and Secretary of State for International Development met with representatives of religious faiths and non-governmental organisations at 11 Downing Street on 21 December to discuss the latest progress under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and to share views on how to move the campaign for debt relief forward.

The Chancellor also reported that the UK would be providing 100 per cent. relief on the debts owed by the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries to the UK's Export Credit Guarantee Department.

Manufacturing

26. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an assessment of the impact which United Kingdom interest rates have had on economic activity in the manufacturing industry of the United Kingdom in the past 12 months. [106910]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Manufacturing output rose 1.1 per cent. in the three months to November compared to the previous three months, and has been on an upward trend since spring last year. Performance has been much better than expected.

Departmental Expenditure Targets

27. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the individual departmental expenditure limits targets for the second and third years of the comprehensive spending review period. [106911]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government's plans for departmental expenditure limits for 2000–01 and 2001–02 are set out in "Modern Public Services for Britain: Investing in Reform" (Cm 40411).

Taxation

29. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra tax will be paid in the four years from May 1997 as a result of the three Budgets since July 1997. [106913]

32. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the extra tax that will be paid in the period up to May 2002 as a result of his Budget measures since May 1997. [106918]

Dawn Primarolo: The effects of the last three Budgets on Government tax revenues and expenditure were published in table 2.2 of the July 1997 Financial Statement and Budget Report, and table 1.3 of the March 1998 and March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Reports.

Road Fuel Duty

30. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to discuss the levels of road fuel duty on diesel with finance ministers of other EU member states; and if he will make a statement. [106915]

Mr. Timms: None.

Scotland

31. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact in Scotland of the working families tax credit and the minimum income guarantee. [106916]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that in 2000–01, the first full year of the Working Families Tax Credit, about 130,000 families in Scotland will be in receipt of the credit. Currently a family with someone in full-time work and with one child has a minimum income guarantee of £200 a week.

Economic Growth (South-East)

33. Mr. White: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the prospects for economic growth in the south-east. [106919]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government's latest economic forecast for the UK economy was published on 9 November 1999 as part of the Pre-Budget Report. The South East, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is expected to continue to benefit from the long-term action we have taken to lock in economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment.

Income Tax

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the expected change in after-tax income by earners who earn (a) 50 per cent., (b) 75 per cent., (c) 150 per cent., (d) 200 per cent. and (e) 300 per cent. of median incomes as a result of the 1p reduction in income tax to be implemented in April. [106886]

Dawn Primarolo: A great many factors can affect an individual's after-tax income—and this Government have introduced measures designed to boost take-home pay and increase the net incomes of families with children. The cut in the basic rate is one of those measures. Families with children will on average be £740 per year better off as a result of the last two budgets.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 113W, (1) on what is his estimate of the number of people whose taxable incomes will exceed £100,000 per year in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03; [107799]

(2) on what is his estimate of the numbers of people who had taxable incomes of over £100,000 in each year from 1979–80 to 1999–2000; and if he will estimate for each year from 1990–91 onwards the additional revenue which would have accrued from a basic income tax rate of 50% on taxable income over £100,000 per year. [107800]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of people with taxable incomes over £100,000 is estimated to be around 204,000 in 2000–01, 227,000 in 2001–02 and 243,000 in 2002–03.

These estimates are based on the 1997–98 Survey of Personal incomes and are consistent with the November 1999 Pre-Budget Report forecast.

I regret that it would be possible to provide reliable estimates for the number of taxpayers with taxable incomes above £100,000 and the tax yield from charging a rate of 50 per cent. for taxable incomes above £100,000 only at disproportionate cost.

However, the number of people with total incomes above £100,000 are set out in the table (for years between 1979–80 and 1999–2000).

Financial year	Number of taxpayers[1] with total income above £100,000	Numbers based on survey of personal incomes
1979–80	2,000	1979–80
1980–81	4,000	1980–81
1981–82	5,000	1981–82
1982–83	7,000	1982–83
1983–84	8,000	1983–84
1984–85	10,000	1984–85
1985–86	17,000	1985–86
1986–87	25,000	1986–87
1987–88	33,000	1987–88
1988–89	55,000	1988–89
1989–90	78,000	1989–90
1990–91	81,000	1990–91
1991–92	104,000	1991–92
1992–93	95,000	1992–93
1993–94	103,000	1993–94
1994–95	118,000	1994–95
1995–96	126,000	1995–96
1996–97	154,000	1996–97
1997–98	186,000	1997–98
1998–99	207,000	1997–98
1999–2000	227,000	1997–98

[1] Prior to 1990–91 most married couples were counted as one taxpayer

Unemployment (East Midlands)

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of his economic policies on levels of unemployment in the east midlands. [106893]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the East Midlands region, as in the rest of the UK, we have created a sound platform of economic stability that will help us attain our objective of stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, employment in the East Midlands is up, unemployment is down, long-term unemployment is down by two-thirds and youth unemployment by three-quarters.

Construction Industry

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect the new Construction Industry Scheme arrangements will have on the construction plant hire industry. [104892]

Dawn Primarolo: The purpose of the new Construction Industry Scheme, which took effect on 1 August 1999, is to tackle tax fraud and evasion across the industry as a whole. The Inland Revenue are continuing to consult with representative bodies about areas of the scheme which are causing difficulties.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the Construction Plant Hire Association. [104893]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue are continuing to consult with representative bodies about the new scheme and the areas of difficulty which have been brought to their attention. They are considering all the points which have been made to them.

Transport Spending

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any real terms increases in spending on public transport and the road network that result from real terms increases in revenues from fuel duties will be in addition to the planned increases in real terms spending on transport that were announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [107980]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Yes, within the total of managed expenditure determined by the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if any real terms spending on the NHS that results from real terms increases in revenues from tobacco will be in addition to the planned increases in real terms spending on the NHS that were announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review; [107982]

(2) if spending on public transport and the road network during the period of the second Comprehensive Spending Review, excluding any increases in spending that result from real terms increases in revenues from fuel duties, will not be cut in real terms. [107981]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 569W.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what help is being given to those wood fibre particleboard and wood fibreboard producers who will be adversely affected by the climate change levy. [107938]

Mr. Timms: Sites in these sectors which are covered by the Integrated Pollution Prevention Control Directive, as defined by reference to Part A of the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations, will be eligible for an 80 per cent. discount from the levy if they sign up to a negotiated agreement to improve energy efficiency that meets the Government's criteria.

More generally, all firms in these sectors will benefit from the other modifications to the design of the climate change levy announced by the Chancellor in the Pre-Budget Report, including the lower overall rates of the levy; the exemptions for electricity generated from 'new' forms of renewable energy and 'good quality' combined heat and power plants; and the trebling of support for energy efficiency measures under the levy package.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 31 January; and if he will make a statement. [108322]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer attended the Economic and Finance Council of Ministers.

The Portuguese Presidency presented their work programme. The main emphasis will be on preparation for the Special European Council at Lisbon, which will set a new agenda for economic policy reform. Other key themes of the Presidency are continuing work on economic policy co-ordination, including the Broad Economic Policy Guidelines, promoting the single market, particularly in financial services, improving financial management, and tackling money laundering.

The Presidency also undertook to continue work on the tax package. The Chancellor emphasised the importance of continuing to take measures that genuinely combat harmful tax competition, through the work of the Code of Conduct Group, as work is taken forward on the conclusions of the Helsinki European Council, which established the very clear principle that all citizens resident in the EU should pay the tax due on all their savings income.

As part of Stage III of EMU, member states are obliged to submit stability (for the Outs) and convergence (for the Ins) programmes annually, as updates to their original programmes submitted in March 1999. The deadline was end December 1999, and the programmes are now being examined by ECOFIN Ministers over three meetings. The programmes for Sweden, Greece, Finland, Ireland and the Netherlands were discussed and agreed.

Bank Accounts

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the percentage of adults who have bank accounts. [108213]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Various surveys indicate that the percentage of adults who have either a current account or a savings account is in the range 91 to 94 per cent.

Euro

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies his Department has carried out to quantify (a) the trade and competition effects of the United Kingdom entering the euro and (b) the impact of the euro on trade and competition in the Euro Zone. [108374]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have set out five economic tests which define whether an economic case can be made for membership of EMU. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has said we will make another assessment of the five economic tests early in the next Parliament.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of working age people were in employment in the spring quarter of (a) 1998 and (b) 1999. [108355]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 3 February 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on proportions of working age people in employment.

Estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), the main source of labour market data on individuals, give the proportion of working age people in employment for spring 1998 as 73.4 per cent, and for spring 1999 as 73.9 per cent. These estimates are seasonally adjusted and are taken from Table 2a of the ONS Labour Force Survey Quarterly Supplement Vol. 6, which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Employment rates express the total of working age in employment as a percentage of all of working age. Working age is defined as men aged 16–64 and women aged 16–59.

People aged 16 or over are classed as in employment by the LFS if they have done at least one hour of paid work (as an employee or self-employed) in the week prior to their LFS interview or if they have a job that they are temporarily away from. People who do unpaid work in a family business and people on Government-supported training and employment programmes are also included according to the International Labour Organisation convention.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proportion of working-age people lived in a household where no adult worked in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999; [108354]

(2) what proportion of children aged under 16 years lived in workless households in 1998 and 1999. [108351]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 3 February 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions on working age people in workless households and children aged under 16 in workless households.

In August 1998 the ONS introduced Labour Force Survey (LFS) databases especially designed for analyses of labour market data on households. Workless households in the LFS are defined as households with no-one in employment. People aged 16 or over are classed as in employment by the LFS if they have done at least one hour of paid work (as an employee or self-employed) in the week prior to their LFS interview or if they have a job that they are temporarily away from. People who do unpaid work in a family business and people on Government-supported training and employment programmes are also included according to the International Labour Organisation convention.

The estimates below have been restricted to working-age households, which are defined as households including at least one person of working age, i.e. a man aged 16 to 64 and a woman aged 16 to 59.

For spring 1998, the estimate of the proportion of working-age people living in workless households was 13.0 per cent. For spring 1999 it was 12.6 per cent. For spring 1998, the estimate of the proportion of children aged under 16 living in workless households was 18.2 per cent. In spring 1999 it was 17.6 per cent. Both sets of figures were published in an article in the January 2000 issue of Labour Market Trends (pp 25 - 34) which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Life Expectancy

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the healthy life expectancy of people aged 65 years. [108356]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 3 February 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the healthy life expectancy of people aged 65 years.

Healthy life expectancy combines mortality and morbidity into a single index. Using the General Household Survey question on self-reported general health, ONS has calculated that in England in 1995[1] a woman aged 65 could expect to live a further 13.2 years in good or fairly good health, and a man aged 65 could expect to live a further 11.4 years in good or fairly good health. This compares with total life expectancy figures at age 65 of 18.4 and 14.8 years for women and men respectively.

The full set of results from this analysis and the methodology used will be published in the ONS journal, Health Statistics Quarterly, later this year.

[1] Using data for 1994–96.

Conceptions

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rate of conceptions to women aged under 18 years of age per 1,000 women aged 15 to 17 years of age in 1998. [108353]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 3 February 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the rate of conceptions to women aged under 18 years in 1998.

Figures for 1998 are not yet available. The conception rates for women aged under 18 in England and Wales for 1990–1997 are shown in the table:

Year	Conceptions to women under 18 per 1,000 women aged 15–17
1990	47.7
1991	44.6
1992	43.6
1993	42.5
1994	42.0
1995	42.0
1996	46.4
1997	45.9

Amusement Machine Licensing Duty

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been received in revenue from Amusement Machine Licensing Duty in each of the last five years. [108312]

Mr. Timms: The figures for receipts in the last five calendar years from Amusement Machine Licence Duty are as follows.

£000

Year	Receipts
1995	113,014
1996	129,719
1997	132,943
1998	142,127
1999	162,157

Fiscal Policy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make reducing inequality a central feature of his fiscal policy. [106894]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to building a fairer and more inclusive society in which everyone can contribute to and benefit from economic prosperity. In the Pre-Budget Report, the Chancellor set out the long-term ambition for the next decade to halve child poverty as a step on the way to abolishing child poverty within a generation. Measures in the last two Budgets will lift around 800,000 children out of poverty.

Pensioners should also share fairly in the nation's increasing prosperity. The Pre-Budget Report announced Winter Allowance for every pensioner household for the rest of the Parliament, free TV licence for older pensioners who are most likely to be poor, and will uprate minimum income guarantee in line with earnings for the rest of the Parliament.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108412]

Mr. Timms: Correspondence between MPs and Departments is treated in confidence and is not a matter of public record.

Knitted Goods Sales

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the timetable for the publication of the Office for National Statistics 1998 figures for manufacturers' sales of hosiery and other knitted goods to the public. [106914]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Detailed product data from the 1998 quarterly Products of the European Community (PRODCOM) survey of manufacturers' sales of knitted and crocheted articles were published on 28 September 1999.

Provisional results of the 1998 Annual Business Inquiry (ABI) will be published on 11 February 2000. This News Release will contain values for turnover, purchases and gross value added for the textile and textile products industry. More detailed industry results, including those for the manufacture of knitted and crocheted articles, will be published around August 2000.

Contingencies Fund (Kosovo)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what drawings have been made from the Contingencies Fund in relation to events in Kosovo in the past 12 months. [106896]

Mr. Andrew Smith: No advances from the Contingency Fund have been made to Departments involved in the peacekeeping, humanitarian and refugee programmes for Kosovo in the last 12 months. There was though in June an allocation from the Reserve for £10 million additional humanitarian assistance, and the Spring Supplementary Estimates which will be the subject of separate written answers providing a further £536 million for Kosovo-related spending from the Reserve.

VAT (Energy-saving Materials)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies the Treasury has undertaken on the (a) cost and (b) financial, social, economic and legal effects of reducing VAT on energy-saving materials and technologies. [108302]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs carried out just such a review in 1997. They published "Helping the Less Well-off Save Energy, The Scope for a Reduced Rate of VAT" in November 1997, a copy of which is available from the Library of the House. It can also be seen on the Customs and Excise website at:

http://www.hmce.gov.uk/bus/vat/green.htm

We introduced a 5 per cent. VAT rate for grant funded installations of energy-saving materials as a direct result of this report.

Customs and Excise

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to HM Customs and Excise departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for 1999–2000. [108698]

Dawn Primarolo: There are currently no plans to change the overall departmental expenditure limit of HM Customs and Excise. However, subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XVI, Vote 3 (HM Customs and Excise: administration), the running costs limit will be increased by £9,001,000 from £792,115,000 to £801,116,000. The increase is required to cover the effect of accounting classification changes on the department's IT current expenditure.

The increase will be entirely offset by a reduction in capital provision. It will not therefore add to either the departmental expenditure limit or the planned total of public expenditure.

Inland Revenue

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the Inland Revenue's departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for 1999–2000. [108697]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to parliamentary approval of the Supplementary Estimate for Class XVI, Vote 4 the Inland Revenue Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £10,053,000 from £2,168,461,000 to £2,178,514,000. The Inland Revenue running cost limit will also be increased by £5,663,000 from £2,168,840,000 to £2,174,503,000.

The increase is mainly due to the transfer of £5,610,000 running costs and £4,390,000 capital from the Department of Trade and Industry, Class 9, Vote 1 for the provision of payroll support to new employers.

The increase will be offset by transfers or charged to the DEL reserve and will not add therefore to the planned total of public expenditure.

Public Sector Pensions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees (a) opted-out of or (b) did not take the option to join contributory public sector pension schemes in the period 1988 to 1994 inclusive. [108002]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Complete data are not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. In the review of mis-selling of personal pensions it was estimated that around 300,000 employees may have opted out of the main public service pension schemes in this period. This figure excluded the Local Government Pension Scheme and the schemes for police and fire brigades which are administered on a decentralised basis by local authorities.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many employees were reinstated to non-contributory public sector pension schemes in the financial years 1996–97 to 1998–99 inclusive; [107999]

(2) how many employees were reinstated to contributory public sector pension schemes in the financial years 1996–97 to 1998–99 inclusive. [108003]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Complete data are not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. The numbers for the main public service schemes excluding those administered on a decentralised basis by local authorities are shown in the table. Information is not available on pension schemes in the wider public sector. The Armed Forces Pension Scheme is the only non-contributory public service pension scheme. Very few reinstatements were completed prior to 1997–98.

Mis-selling review—number of reinstatements into public service pensions schemes

	1997–98[1]	1998–99
Non-contributory scheme	—	—
Armed Forces	2	8
Contributory schemes	—	—
Teachers	1,626	4,078
National Health Service	3,290	22,448
Northern Ireland Teachers, NHS etc.	290	801
Civil Service[2]	16	66
Scottish Teachers and NHS	757	1,832
Total	5,981	29,233

[1] Includes small number of reinstatements made in 1996–97

[2] Employee contributions to the PCSPS are refundable in certain circumstances.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees (a) opted-out of or (b) did not take up the option to join non-contributory public sector pension schemes in the period 1988 to 1994 inclusive. [107998]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Armed Forces Pension Scheme is the only non-contributory public service pension scheme. Entry to the scheme is automatic on employment. 83 employees opted out of the scheme in the period 1988 to 1994.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press releases his Department issued from 1995 to 1999. [108183]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 February 2000, Official Report, column 636W.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Child Care

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of planned Ofsted inspections of child minders on the provision of child minding services. [105988]

Ms Hodge: Transferring the responsibility for child minding and day care regulation to the new and distinct Early Years Directorate in Ofsted will enable the best of the present regulatory system for child care to be brought together with that for nursery education inspections. This will help create greater coherence and integration and will lead to improvements in the quality of child care and early years education services. The new Directorate will deliver its services through a national and regional structure supported by a local presence.

Establishing new national standards will ensure consistency across the country. The present system has led to widely varying interpretations; a national framework delivered at a local level will ensure greater clarity and consistency for providers, including child minders. In addition, local authorities will continue to provide training, guidance and advice to child minders and prospective child minders to encourage them to meet the relevant standards for registration.

Parents will have access to open information from Ofsted reports and this will enable them to make better informed choices. This will ensure that parents have greater trust and confidence in the quality of the child care services available locally.

Correspondence

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed dated 12 October 1999, relating to a constituent living in Shilbottle, Northumberland, on the subject of a student loan. [107286]

Mr. Blunkett: A reply was sent on 1 February 2000. I am sorry for the delay in replying to the right hon. Member.

Seed Challenge Capital (Essex)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total allocation of Seed Challenge Capital for schools within Essex County Council in the next financial year; and how many schools within Essex County Council are eligible to bid for funds under the scheme. [107758]

Jacqui Smith: The total allocation of Seed Challenge Capital for schools within Essex County Council in the next financial year is £650,909. All maintained schools are eligible to bid for funds under the scheme. The next financial year, 2000–01, is a pilot year for Seed Challenge. If it is successful in building partnerships and raising additional funding, we will consider expanding the scheme in future years.

Computers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on how many occasions in each of the past five years computer systems in his Department have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (a) within and (b) outside his Department. [106223]

Mr. Wills: There have been no successful attempts to gain illegal access to DfEE systems in the past five years from either within or outside my Department.

Degree Courses

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students enrolled for degree courses in each year since 1995. [108009]

Mr. Wicks: The available information is given in the table. 1997 entrant numbers may have been inflated because entrants who might otherwise have taken a gap year decided not to as they were influenced by the knowledge that fees would be introduced with effect from 1998. Comparable data for 1999–2000 will be published by the Higher Education Statistics Agency in April.

UCAS figures covering full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses only, show that the number of UK domiciled applicants accepted for entry increased by 1.6 per cent. between autumn 1998 and autumn 1999.

Foreign Seamen

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many foreign seamen have received work permits in the last 12 months. [108022]

Ms Hodge: No foreign seamen have received work permits during the last 12 months.

Playing Fields

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many inner-city schools have access to playing fields for sport. [108134]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not collect this information.

Graduates

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of graduates in the UK gained full-time employment within two years of graduating in each year since 1995. [108008]

Mr. Wicks: Information on the destinations of graduates is collected annually by the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA), and shows the employment position of students six months after graduation. This information is given in the table.

Recent research undertaken by the Institute for Employment Research which tracked the longer term career paths of graduates was published in "Moving On—Graduate Careers Three Years after Graduation" and showed that approximately 90 per cent. of students graduating in July 1995 were in employment in December 1998.

Montserrat

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with the British Council regarding the higher education awards to students from Montserrat studying in the United Kingdom. [108139]

Mr. Wicks: Officials from my Department meet from time to time with the British Council, who administer the Montserrat Emergency Award Scheme, to discuss the scheme's effectiveness, guidance on eligibility criteria, numbers of Montserrat students involved and the associated funding required. The scheme began in 1997, following volcanic activity on Montserrat, and provides students with bursaries to help meet the costs of their higher education tuition in England and Wales. My Department is providing £1.322 million to support 198 students in the current financial year.

Class Sizes

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary school and (b) secondary school pupils are estimated to be in classes of 30 or more pupils for each year from 1990–91 to 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [107790]

Ms Estelle Morris: The available information is shown in the table.

Information on class sizes in January is currently being collected for the year 1999–2000 and provisional estimates will be published in a Statistical First Release in April 2000. Figures for the year 2000–01 will not be collected until the next Annual census exercise is undertaken in January 2001.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the number of pupils in (a) primary school classes and (b) secondary school classes with over 30 pupils for each English county from 1991–92 to 1999–2000; and what percentage these numbers represent of the total (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools population for each such county. [107792]

Ms Estelle Morris: The available information is shown in the tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Information on classes as taught in England in January 2000 is currently being collected and provisional national figures will be published in a Statistical First Release in April.

Teacher Competencies

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 2000, Official Report, columns 386–87W, on teacher competencies, (a) how the proposed standards for teachers wishing to cross the proposed new performance threshold will be determined and (b) when the Hay McBer report will be considered. [108423]

Ms Estelle Morris: The standards for the performance threshold will be determined by the Secretary of State in the light of comments from School Teachers' Review Body consultees. A draft was proposed in the technical consultation document on pay and performance management, published in February 1999. It is being further developed in the light of responses received during the consultation on the technical consultation document and in the light of research by Hay McBer into the characteristics of effective teaching. Recommendations about the performance threshold standards were an early output of that research.

DfEE expects to receive the final report from Hay McBer on the characteristics of effective teaching at the end of February 2000. The full report will look at the characteristics of effective teaching at different stages of the profession, including post-induction and Advanced Skills Teacher. DfEE will want to consider, with the profession, how this framework might be used to support teachers' continuing professional development.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of (a) primary school per pupil standard spending assessments and (b) secondary school per pupil standard spending assessments for each English county for each of the years 1990–91 to 2000–01 in real terms using 1998–99 prices; and if in each case he will rank these from highest to lowest per pupil expenditure. [107787]

Ms Estelle Morris: I will place tables in the Library that give the figures requested for the 34 Upper Tier Authorities[1] based on the final Standard Spending Assessment allocations for 1990–91 to 2000–01. These have not been adjusted for any changes in local authority function over the years and may not be directly comparable due to the effects of local government reorganisation.

[1] Upper Tier Authority is a DETR term used to define county/shire councils.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to review the levels of (a) primary school and (b) secondary school standard spending assessments across English counties; and if he will make a statement; [107788]

(2) if he will make a statement on his assessment of whether funding of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Somerset on the basis of standard spending assessments is presently fair and equitable in relation to such funding levels across the rest of English education authorities. [107793]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government are well aware that there is widespread concern about the fairness of the current formula for funding local authorities. The Government announced in November 1998 a review in partnership with local government to look for a way of distributing revenue support grant which is simpler, more stable, more robust and fairer than the present arrangements for Standard Spending Assessments. The Government will be issuing a Green Paper on options for change by the Summer.

School Funding (Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many bids have been received from schools in Somerset since 1 May 1997 for all centrally allocated spending, classified as (a) capital funding, (b) Standards Fund funding and (c) other funding; how many of such bids have been (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful; and if he will make a statement. [107789]

Ms Estelle Morris: Centrally allocated funds, including the Standards Fund and funding for capital work, are usually distributed on a formula basis or as a result of bids from Local Education Authorities, not via bids from individual maintained schools. Non-maintained special schools can bid directly for capital grant, but there are no such schools in Somerset. Until March 1999 grant maintained schools bid to the Funding Agency for Schools (FAS) for capital grants on a rolling programme. Between May 1997 and March 1999, 13 bids from grant maintained schools located in Somerset and Bath and North East Somerset were successful. The FAS maintained no record of the number of unsuccessful bids. Schools in Somerset have also led two successful bids for setting up Education Action Zones.

Teacher Redundancies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teacher redundancies in maintained schools there were (a) during the academic year 1999–2000 and (b) in the previous five academic years. [108314]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of teacher premature retirements on the grounds of redundancy[1] from the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector in England and Wales by financial year[2] is in the table:

Year	Number
1994–95	2,400
1995–96	3,300
1996–97	2,900
1997–98	2,300

[1] Data on teachers taking severance on the grounds of redundancy are not held centrally.

[2] Data for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are not available.

Educational Achievement

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the working-age population had a qualification in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999. [108350]

Mr. Wicks: The proportion of the working age population in the United Kingdom to have any qualification, as measured by the Labour Force Survey, was 82.1 per cent. in 1998 and 82.9 per cent. in 1999.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of children (a) from the Indian sub-continent and (b) from the rest of the world wrongly refused settlement by his Department on the basis of not being related as claimed, who are now able to prove their relationship through DNA testing. [107293]

Mrs. Roche: I regret that there is no reliable way of assessing the numbers of such children, who were refused entry clearance in good faith on the evidence available at the time.

Mr. Rouea Gargan

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct an investigation into his Department's loss of Mr. Rouea Gargan's passport, ref. G1008833. [107053]

Mrs. Roche: I am very sorry that Mr. Gargan's passport appears to have been lost. Several searches have been conducted by the Integrated Casework Directorate (ICD) in an effort to locate Mr. Gargan's passport and documents. The ICD will continue to search for them and if they are recovered in the short term, his passport will be endorsed and returned to him. The issue of compensation in connection with his replacement documents will be addressed as soon as possible.

In the meantime, Mr. Gargan has now been issued with a letter facilitating his readmission to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the correspondence of 18 August 1999 and 22 November 1999 from the hon. Member for Torbay regarding Mr. Rouea Gargan, a constituent; and if he will make a statement. [107055]

Mrs. Roche: I wrote to the hon. Member today. I am sorry for the delay.

Credit Ratings

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the credit rating of companies seeking to tender for services provided by his Department is checked before the contract is awarded. [107742]

Mr. Straw: In assessing a company's capability for providing services to the Department over the period of a contract, its financial status and background will be checked using information which will include latest audited accounts and other relevant published details such as credit and debt rating. These checks are undertaken on contracts where early termination would place a financial and operational risk on the Department.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often the credit rating of companies supplying services to his Department is checked. [107748]

Mr. Straw: Once a contract has been let, the Department will carry out checks only if it has reason to believe that any of its contractors may be in financial difficulty.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the proportion of freedom of information requests for information which will be turned down because of the cost; and if he will make a statement. [108085]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Freedom of Information Bill, a fee may be charged by a public authority, in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary of State. The regulations will set an 'appropriate limit', whereby if the cost of complying with the request exceeds that limit they would be exempt from that obligation under clause 11 of the Bill. These regulations are currently being prepared and it is intended that they will be circulated in draft as soon as possible. However, without pre-empting the regulations the Government's view have been that the 'appropriate limit' should be the same as the £500 threshold for disproportionate costs which currently applies to parliamentary questions. It is not possible to make accurate projections of the number of requests that will fall outside this limit at this stage. However, I am confident that the percentage of cases where the exemption is claimed and the applicant refused will be very small.

It is, of course, possible that this threshold would be exceeded on occasions where, for example, an application required a significant amount of work on the part of the authority in drawing the information together. In such circumstances, the authority would still be required to consider the disclosure of the information, under clause 13 of the Bill, if to do so would be in the public interest. Therefore, even if the 'appropriate limit' is exceeded, it is still possible, because of the nature of the information, that it will be disclosed.

Wormwood Scrubs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make an announcement on the future of HMP Wormwood Scrubs; and if he will make a statement. [108080]

Mr. Straw: Following the publication of the Chief Inspector of Prisons report on Wormwood Scrubs in June I asked him to undertake a six month follow-up inspection to check on progress. The Chief Inspector is expected to commence this follow-up inspection shortly. I will make an announcement after I have received the Chief Inspector's report and given due consideration to his recommendations.

War Crimes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people residing in the UK have been investigated for war crimes; and if he will make a statement. [108082]

Mr. Charles Clarke: 376 individuals were investigated by the former War Crimes Unit at New Scotland Yard after the introduction of the War Crimes Act 1991. In addition, one person (Konrad Kalejs) temporarily present in the country was investigated by the Metropolitan police earlier this year. I am not aware of any other such investigations.

Electoral Register

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to introduce the provisions of the Representation of the People Bill relating to the rolling electoral register. [107918]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I would like to bring this change into force in time for the next annual registration canvass in the autumn, together with those relating to the sale of the register and other registration changes. But the timetable will depend on the progress of the Representation of the People Bill through Parliament; agreement on the content of the subsequent regulations and their precise drafting; and parliamentary approval of those regulations under the affirmative resolution procedures.

British Citizenship Applications

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current waiting time for case workers to commence to process applications for British citizenship. [108108]

Mrs. Roche: The average waiting time for applications decided in December 1999 was 19 months.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the Oath of Allegiance. [108408]

Mr. Straw: Correspondence between Members and Departments is treated in confidence unless the Member concerned chooses to make such issues public. I am therefore unable to provide the information requested.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made on consultation with regard to implementation of the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 relating to (a) civil penalty, (b) flexibility and passenger information, (c) facilities to be provided by port operators and (d) charging for additional immigration services. [108705]

Mrs. Roche: Constructive and detailed discussions are proceeding with representative organisations. As part of that process, consultation papers relating to each of these provisions have been circulated to those representatives and others in the industry. I have placed copies of the documents in the Library.

Police Officer Numbers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to place the announcement of twice-yearly police officer number figures for England and Wales on a regular timescale; if the latest figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [108081]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are no plans to announce changes to police numbers within a specific timescale. The figures are published as soon as all police forces have submitted the relevant information and it has been validated. Police numbers as at 30 September 1999 will be issued shortly.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra police officers there will be in Somerset in each of the next three years as a result of his recent statement of intent to increase national police officer numbers by 5,000; and if he will make a statement. [107796]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are currently assessing the bids which all forces have made under the recruitment scheme of the Crime Fighting Fund to determine whether they meet the criteria laid down in the bidding guidelines which were issued to forces and a copy placed in the Library on 2 December 1999. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will be announcing the results shortly.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the (a) establishment and (b) actual available officer numbers for (i) each English police force and (ii) each Avon and Somerset divisional force for the latest period for which statistics are available; and if he will make a statement. [107841]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is for chief constables to determine the number of officers in each force, within the resources available. The latest available information on the number of officers in each English police force is set out in the table.

Figures showing the authorised strength and actual strength of the eight territorial divisions in the Avon and Somerset Constabulary are are also shown. This information has been provided by the chief constable.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total number of police officers in England and Wales on 31 January. [108292]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on police numbers is collected twice a year (March and September). Police strength figures as at 31 March 1999 were 126,096; figures as at 30 September will be published shortly.

Police Officers (Sick Leave)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are on long-term sick leave in (a) each English police force and (b) each Avon and Somerset divisional force for the latest period for which such statistics are available; if he will restate these figures to show them as a proportion of total establishment officer strength in each case; and if he will make a statement. [107842]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information about the number of police officers on long-term sick leave is not held centrally. The table shows: the total number of police days lost in 1998–99 due to long-term sick leave for all forces in England and Wales; and the percentage of working days in that year lost as a result of long-term sick leave.

The same information is not held centrally for each division of Avon and Somerset Constabulary.

Young Offenders (Avon and Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the number of young offenders within the Avon and Somerset area who have committed (a) five offences or more, (b) 10 offences or more, (c) 20 offences or more and (d) 50 offences or more; and if he will make a statement. [107844]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The exact information requested is not held centrally. However, information is available on the number of recordable offences for which a 1998 sample of persistent young offenders had been convicted.

This indicates that a total of 173 individual persistent young offenders were sentenced on one or more occasions during 1998 following apprehension by the Avon and Somerset police. Of these 33 had been sentenced for a total of between five and nine recordable offences, 64 had been sentenced for between 10 and 19 recordable offences, 65 had been sentenced for between 20 and 49 recordable offences, and 10 had been sentenced for 50 or more recordable offences. The remaining individual had been sentenced for four recordable offences.

We define persistent young offenders as having at least three previous convictions and being apprehended for a further offence within three years of their most recent previous sentence.

Avon and Somerset Police

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in the Avon and Somerset force are (a) allocated to policing within the Bristol area and (b) on standby for policing within the Bristol area; and if he will make a statement. [107843]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand from the Chief Constable that three territorial divisions police the Bristol area. At the end of January, there were 831 police officers in these divisions.

Police officers are not held on standby for policing a particular division. Avon and Somerset Constabulary's resources are managed to provide flexibility of response to major incidents, whether planned or spontaneous. A number of specialist units are also available to provide specialised operational policing capabilities on a forcewide basis.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) civilians and (b) special constables have been employed by the Avon and Somerset Police for each of the last five years. [107845]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The strength of the civilians and special constables employed by Avon and Somerset Constabulary for each of the last five years is recorded in the table:

Year [1]	Civilians [2]	Special Constables
1995	1,204	651
1996	1,213	688
1997	1,438	759
1998	1,393	621
1999	1,424	547

Police Calls

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of (a) calls and (b) completed call cards for each English police force for the latest available year; and if he will give the ratio of police officers to calls and call cards for each force. [107798]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Data are not collected in the form requested. Information held by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary for the year 1998–99 in respect of all calls to the police for services requiring further action by the police is given in the table:

Forces	Police strength [1]	Total calls for service [2]	Calls for service per 100 police officers

Police Overtime

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of hours of (a) paid and (b) unpaid overtime by police officers for each of the last five years, broken down by each English police force. [107797]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information is not held centrally on the number of hours of paid and unpaid overtime worked by police officers, and cannot be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Exotic Animals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to introduce tighter controls to limit the sale of exotic animals; and if he will make a statement; [108179]

(2) what his policy is in respect of the animal welfare implications of the sale of reptiles in DIY stores; and if he will make a statement. [108178]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our policy is to ensure that law is in place to safeguard the welfare of animals offered for sale as pets. This applies as much to reptiles in do-it-yourself stores, as it does to animals sold through other outlets. We intend that the law should be effectively enforced.

We believe that the Pet Animals Act 1951 (as amended), together with the Protection of Animals Act 1911 (as amended), meet that objective. Although there is no plan to introduce tighter controls at present, we will keep the situation under review to ensure the law is able to address the issues.

Under the 1951 Act, persons in the business of selling pet animals must be licensed by local authorities. The licence conditions have to cover the suitability and cleanliness of the animals' accommodation, feeding arrangements, and protection from disease and fire. The local authority may inspect licensed premises at all reasonable times, and a breach of licence conditions may result in a fine of £500 and/or three months imprisonment for the offender, as well as his or her disqualification from keeping a pet shop in future.

Under the 1911 Act, it is an offence, punishable by a fine of up to £5,000 and/or six months imprisonment, to cause unnecessary suffering to any domestic or captive animal, and this includes animals kept as stock by persons trading in pets, both before and after their sale.

In addition, some species of reptile may be lawfully kept, after purchase from a pet supplier, only by someone suitably licensed under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976. Others may be threatened species controlled under the Convention on the Trade in Endangered Species (CITES), under which welfare requirements must be satisfied before the animals concerned are allowed to enter the country. There is control over their subsequent movements.

Burns Inquiry

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons he rejected the proposal to appoint (a) AJF Webster, (b) Piran White, (c) Donald Broom, (d) Stephen Harris and (e) Baroness Young to the Burns Inquiry into hunting; and if he will make a statement. [108181]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It would be invidious to give details of the merits of any person not appointed to the Committee of Inquiry into Hunting.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he made of the personal views of the members appointed to serve on the Burns Inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [108227]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I set out any association which each member of the Inquiry Team has had with hunting in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) on 1 February 2000, Official Report, columns 504–06W.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is satisfied that any personal and private views, one way or the other, will not prevent any of them from providing an informative view on the issues before the Committee.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet the target set in the EU 5th Environmental Action Programme of halving the number of animals used in experiments by 2000; and if he will make a statement. [108180]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The 5th Environment Action Programme did not set a baseline against which progress could be monitored. Nor did it set a plan for implementing the proposal. Most member states did not produce accurate statistics in 1993. Fundamental questions, such as whether it was a country-by-country or a Europe wide target, were not addressed. There is no mechanism for a year-on-year reduction.

A European conference was held in April 1997 to discuss the 50 per cent. target. The United Kingdom was represented by Home Office officials, a member of the Animal Procedures Committee, and interest groups. It was generally agreed that the 50 per cent. target was unrealistic, unhelpful and over-simplistic. The reduction target was recognised as ignoring the importance of refining experiments to minimise suffering. It was suggested that specific types of animal use (for example, the use of primates and aspects of regulatory testing) should be targeted.

Neither Directive 86/609/European Economic Community, nor the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, make provision for controlling the overall number of procedures. The Act requires that project licences be granted only if the benefits have been weighed against the costs and the purpose of the work cannot be achieved by other means. We cannot dictate how many applications for new project licences will be submitted, nor how many proposed programmes will satisfy the requirements of the Act, particularly the cost/benefit assessment. We are, however, ensuring that animals are used in scientific procedures only where this is fully justified and that the overall numbers of animals used is minimised as far as possible. We are also pressing for advances in the 3Rs of reduction, refinement and replacement.

Violent Offences

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to reduce the number of violent offences committed in England and Wales. [108287]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, 375 local partnerships have been established in every area across the country to develop local crime reduction strategies to address local demands. Over time these will provide a measure of crime more relevant to people's everyday experience. The Crime Reduction Strategy, launched by the Government last November, sets out how we are working with partnerships and the steps we are taking to reduce crime. The Government have a range of measures and initiatives to deal with violent crime in particular. They include the following:

We have asked police and local authorities to set targets from April 2000 to reduce violent crime under the regime of Best Value performance indicators;

Tougher sentences are now in place including automatic life sentences for those convicted for the second time of serious violent or sexual offences (legislation passed under the last Government);

New sex offender orders to protect children and the public (introduced December 1998) and new powers for the court to order extended supervision of sex offenders for up to ten years following their release from prison;

New resources to tackle domestic violence including £6 million from the crime reduction programme;

New targeted policing projects to test out the best way of tackling racial violence (four London boroughs) and alcohol related assaults (Cardiff);

A ban on private ownership of all handguns was introduced within months of the general election;

The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 includes new measures to help vulnerable witnesses such as rape victims (eg banning their cross-examination by a defendant). One of the reasons for the increase in sexual offences is the greater likelihood that victims will report the offence because of improved handling by the police;

In the new Crime Bill we are looking to expand the use of electronic monitoring of dangerous and violent offenders;

We are consulting on measures to deal with dangerous people with severe personality disorder including an indefinite sentence to ensure the public are protected from those who pose the greatest risk;

We are also investing £226 million in offending behaviour programmes in prison including sex offender treatment programmes to reduce the likelihood of reoffending on release; and Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) contributes to a safer environment which can reduce levels of violence and disorder. Part of the Government's £400 million evidence based Crime Reduction Programme includes £150 million for CCTV schemes. 180 schemes were announced on Monday 17 January.

Crime Fighting Fund

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to the Crime Fighting Fund for police recruits have been received. [108290]

Mr. Charles Clarke: All 43 police forces in England and Wales have submitted applications for funding for police recruits under the Crime Fighting Fund. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will be announcing the results shortly.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of the backlog of asylum applications. [108289]

Mrs. Roche: The current estimate for the backlog of asylum claims which were awaiting an initial decision at 31 December 1999 was 102,870.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to reduce the backlog of asylum applications. [108288]

Mrs. Roche: A dedicated team has been set up to deal with pre-July 1993 applications and those between July 1993 and December 1995, in accordance with the criteria set out in the White Paper. We have nearly cleared the backlog of pre-1993 cases and expect to clear the backlog of 1993–95 cases by the summer of this year at the latest.

We have developed new processes to speed up the consideration of asylum applications and recruited numerous additional decision makers to process both new applications and those in the backlog dating from 1996 onwards. Output of asylum decisions has recently increased to record levels.

HEALTH

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide free prescriptions to sufferers of cystic fibrosis; and if he will make a statement. [103651]

Ms Stuart: We reviewed the prescription charging arrangements as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review and concluded that the present arrangements should remain for the rest of this Parliament.

Aricept

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the NHS's prescribing policies in relation to Aricept of (a) West Kent Health Authority, (b) Thames Gateway NHS Trust and (c) general practitioners in the Sittingbourne and Sheppey constituency. [106050]

Ms Stuart: Information about local policies on the treatment of Alzheimer's disease is not routinely collected and assessed centrally, but I understand that West Kent Health Authority is funding the prescribing of Aricept by consultants to patients with uncomplicated Alzheimer's disease. In developing its policy, the health authority took into account the evidence on clinical and cost effectiveness of Aricept, and did not consider it sufficiently convincing to support more widespread prescribing.

Aricept and other pharmaceutical treatment for Alzheimer's disease will be reviewed by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence as part of its first work programme. This work is expected to be completed by December 2000.

Influenza Immunisation

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for health professionals and ancillary staff to be offered influenza immunisation at no cost to themselves from this year onwards. [106133]

Yvette Cooper: Influenza immunisation is not routinely recommended for healthcare workers. Last year, as an exception in view of possible staffing problems should flu occur at the time of the long millennium break, National Health Service trusts were advised that they could include immunising healthcare staff as part of their winter planning. United Kingdom Health Ministers are advised on immunisation policy by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI). The JCVI reviews its recommendations, including immunisation of healthcare workers, annually.

False Teeth

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population of (a) Pendle and (b) England had an entire set of false teeth by the age of (i) 40 years, (ii) 50 years, (iii) 60 years and (iv) 70 years (a) in 1990 and (b) for the latest year for which figures are available. [107616]

Mr. Denham: The Adult Dental Health Survey is a detailed survey carried out every 10 years into the nation's dental health. First release results for the 1998 survey are given for the percentages of the population with no natural teeth by age group for Northern England and England. Also shown are the equivalent percentages of the 1988 survey. Data for Pendle are not available.

Further information for 1988 is contained in the detailed report of the Adult Dental Health Survey 1988, published by HMSO, a copy of which is available in the Library. Chapter 15 gives information on: the time since loss of natural teeth, Table 15.1; and age of current upper and lower dentures, Table 15.4. The detailed ADHS report for 1998 is due to be published in March this year.

Therapeutic Medicines

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will assess the benefits of the prescribing, supply and administration of therapeutic medicines by suitably trained optometrists; [107996]

(2) if he will take steps to enable registered optometrists to prescribe, supply and administer therapeutic medicines. [108097]

Mr. Hutton: Optometrists may already administer a limited number of therapeutic medicines in an emergency; for example, by treating conjunctivitis with anti-biotics. The final report of the Review of Prescribing, Supply and Administration of Medicines recommended that arrangements be made to consider applications from organisations seeking authority to prescribe on behalf of specified groups of health professionals, which could include optometrists. We are carefully considering how best to take forward the report's recommendations in the light of all the views expressed.

Crown Review

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he intends to implement all the recommendations of the Crown Review at the same time; [107994]

(2) when he will implement the recommendations of the Crown Review on the prescribing, supply and administration of therapeutic medicines by non-medical clinicians. [107995]

Ms Stuart: We are carefully considering how best to take forward the report's many recommendations in the light of all the views expressed.

Cardiac Operations

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate of the increased workload on (a) haemotology, (b) blood transfusion and (c) clinical chemistry services he has made arising from his target for cardiac operations. [107458]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 February 2000]: £50 million has been allocated to deliver the additional revascularisation procedures announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 18 October. This includes £30 million revenue over two years to meet the staffing costs associated with this extra clinical activity. The detailed application of these funds is currently being determined.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108400]

Mr. Hutton: Correspondence between hon. Members and Departments is treated in confidence unless the originating hon. Member chooses to make such issues public.

WALES

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108413]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Correspondence between Members of Parliament and Departments is treated in confidence unless the originating MP chooses to make such issues public.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of the number of (a) males and (b) females benefiting from the minimum wage in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [107418]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 3 February 2000:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question regarding the number of males and females who have benefited from the national minimum wage in Wales.

Definitive estimates on the number of people that have benefited from the national minimum wage are not yet available. Currently available estimates for assessing the effect take data from both the New Earnings Survey and the Labour Force Survey and adjust them for known limitations in each. However, the latest adjusted estimates are based on data for the spring (March-May) 1999 Labour Force Survey and this period spans the introduction date for the national minimum wage legislation. As a result, the adjusted estimates may be giving a misleading picture of the effect of the minimum wage legislation since employees might legitimately have been earning below the minimum wage rates in March 1999.

The currently available estimates were published in an ONS First Release on 14 October and show that the number of people earning below the minimum wage rates fell significantly between 1998 and 1999. A copy of this first release is available in the House of Commons Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the Oath of Allegiance. [108411]

Mr. Rooker: Correspondence between Members of the House and this Department is treated as confidential.

Income Support

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many adults aged under 60 years were receiving (a) income support and (b) jobseeker's allowance for two years or more in (i) May 1998 and (ii) May 1999. [108358]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the tables.

Income support claimants aged less than 60, with duration of two years or more in May 1998 and May 1999

Year	Number of claimants
May 1998	1,364,000
May 1999	1,330,000

Low Incomes

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of children aged under 16 years lived in households with incomes that remained (a) below 70 per cent. of average households income and (b) below 60 per cent. of median household income in at least three out of four years between 1995 and 1998. [108352]

Mr. Bayley: Estimates from the British Household Panel Survey suggest that between 1994 and 1997, the latest years for which information is available, 26 per cent. of dependant children lived in households with income below 70 per cent. of median income, and 17 per cent. lived in households with income below 60 per cent. of median income, in at least three years out of four.

Notes:

1. The British Household Panel Survey (BHPS) is based on interviews of a sample of households, and estimates may be subject to sampling error.
2. The BHPS is a longitudinal survey, tracking the same households over time, and estimates may be subject to attrition bias if particular households are more likely to leave the survey.
3. Dependant children are those aged under 16, and those 16–18 in full time education, in 1994.
4. The technical paper accompanying "Opportunity for all: Tackling poverty and social exclusion" [Cm 4445] provided an estimate of 28 per cent. of children living in households below 70 per cent. of average income for the period 1991–94. This should have read below 70 per cent. of median income. The weighting regime employed here differs slightly from that used in the estimates quoted in "Opportunity for all".

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of working-age people had incomes that remained (a) below 70 per cent. of half average income and (b) below 60 per cent. of median income in at least three out of four years between 1995 and 1998. [108348]

Mr. Bayley: Estimates from the British Household Panel Survey suggest that between 1994 and 1997, the latest years for which information is available, 13 per cent. of working age people lived in households with income below 70 per cent. of median income, and 8 per cent. lived in households with income below 60 per cent. of median income, in at least three years out of four.

Notes:

1. The British Household Panel Survey (BHPS) is based on interviews of a sample of households, and estimates may be subject to sampling error.
2. The BHPS is a longitudinal survey, tracking the same households over time, and estimates may be subject to attrition bias if particular households are more likely to leave the survey.
3. The technical paper accompanying "Opportunity for all: Tackling poverty and social exclusion" [Cm 4445] provided estimates of 13 per cent. of working age people living in households below" 70 per cent. of half average income" for the period 1991–94. This should have read below 70 per cent. of median income. The weighting regime employed here differs slightly from that used in the estimates quoted in "Opportunity for all".

Non-state Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total monetary value of non-state pensions contributions in 1998. [108344]

Mr. Rooker: The total monetary value of non-state pensions contributions (employer, employee and self-employed) in 1998 is estimated at £62.0 billion.

Source:

Office for National Statistics, MQ5 publications.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) employees and (b) the self-employed had a non-state pension in 1998. [108343]

Mr. Rooker: The percentages for 1997–98, the most recent available, are estimated at 61 per cent. for employees and 50 per cent. for the self-employed.

Family Resources Survey 1997–98.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of working age people have contributed to a non-state pension in at least three years out of the four between 1995 and 1998. [108345]

Mr. Rooker: 48 per cent. of working age people are estimated to have paid contributions into a non-state scheme during the period 1994 to 1997, the latest available. The figure is based on people aged from 20 years to State pension age.

Benefits (Pensioners)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to encourage pensioners to take up their entitlement to state benefits. [106888]

Mr. Rooker: We are committed to taking action to find more effective ways of encouraging eligible pensioners to claim their entitlement to the minimum income guarantee. We will announce details of a national programme shortly.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much he plans to raise the minimum income guarantee for the poorest pensioners this year. [106917]

Mr. Rooker: From this April, the minimum income guarantee will be increased in line with earnings, providing a single pensioner with at least £78.45 a week and pensioner couples with £121.95.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish an awareness campaign to ensure the take up of the minimum income guarantee by eligible pensioners in North Staffordshire. [108006]

Mr. Rooker: We are committed to taking action to find more effective ways of encouraging eligible pensioners to claim their entitlement to the minimum income guarantee. We will announce details of a national programme shortly.

State Pension

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost and amount of state second pension payable on retirement in (a) 2005, (b) 2010, (c) 2015, (d) 2025, and (e) 2047 on the assumption that the accruals rate for band one is set at (a) 80 per cent., (b) 70 per cent., (c) 60 per cent. or (d) 50 per cent. in year one of the State Second Pension and reduced to 40 per cent. in (i) nine years, (ii) 10 years and (iii) 15 years. [106851]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 2000]: The information is in the tables.

Table 1 shows the extra cost of the various options specified in the years requested the costs for State Second Pension based on the proposals contained in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill.

Notes:

1. Figures are in 1999–2000 earnings terms, ie expressed at a constant level of prices and real earnings. This makes it easier to compare the figures across different years of retirement.
2. All estimated State Second Pension payments include SERPS payments on SERPS accrued before 2002 and are rounded to the nearest whole pound. The State Second Pension is assumed to be introduced in 2002.
3. All calculations are based on a full working life of 49 years. Earnings at the lower earnings threshold (£9,500 a year) have been assumed in every year of the working life.

Maternity Pay

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of extending maternity pay, paid at 90 per cent. of earnings to (a) 18 weeks, (b) 26 weeks, (c) 39 weeks and (d) 52 weeks. [107403]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

The additional full year cost in 2000–01 of extending statutory maternity pay (SMP) beyond six weeks at 90 per cent. of earnings

£ million

Option	Cost increase
Extension of this rate to 18 weeks	560
Extension of this rate to 26 weeks	1,080
Extension of this rate to 39 weeks	1,920
Extension of this rate to 52 weeks	2,750

Note:

These costs are the overall costs based on the Government Actuary's Department projection of the average number of people on SMP during 2000–01 at any one time of 100,000, and assume 100 per cent. take-up.

SCOTLAND

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108398]

Dr. Reid: In accordance with convention, correspondence received by Departments from hon. Members is treated in confidence.

CABINET OFFICE

Regulation

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which Minister within each Government Department has been tasked with overseeing regulation reform. [107003]

Mr. Stringer: The Prime Minister has asked each of the key regulatory Departments to appoint a Minister for Regulatory Reform to oversee a programme of measures to reduce regulatory burdens. The Ministers for Regulatory Reform are:

HM Treasury—Paymaster General (Dawn Primarolo MP)

Department of Trade and Industry—Minister of State (Patricia Hewitt MP)

Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lord Whitty)

Department of Health—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Gisela Stuart MP)

Home Office—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Mike O'Brien MP)

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—Minister of State (the right hon. Joyce Quin MP), and Department for Education and Employment—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Margaret Hodge MP).

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings she has had with the Fair Regulation Campaign; what was discussed; what decisions were taken; and what plans she has for future meetings. [107005]

Mr. Stringer: My right hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), the former Minister for the Cabinet Office, met the Fair Regulation Campaign in July 1999 to discuss their objectives for improving regulatory impact assessments by Government Departments and the EU. On Friday 28 January, the Minister for the Cabinet Office was due to follow up with the Fair Regulation Campaign their round of discussions with Government Departments and parallel work in Brussels on reducing regulatory burdens. The Minister for the Cabinet Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Redcar (Marjorie Mowlam) welcomed the Campaign's offer of assistance and asked them to work alongside the Government to make improvements to the regulatory systems. There are no plans at present for a further meeting.

British-Irish Council

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 12 January 2000, Official Report, columns 200–01W, if she will list those categories of matter to be discussed by the British-Irish Council under the remit, Approaches to EU Issues. [108281]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Belfast Agreement recognised "Approaches to EU affairs" as being one of the topics which the British Irish Council could consider.

The summit meeting of the Council in December 1999 confirmed a general list of subjects which the Council could consider. It also identified as initial priorities the environment, drugs, social inclusion, transport and the knowledge economy. No discussion took place on which EU issues might, in future, be the subject of work within the framework of the Council.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many letters she has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108407]

Marjorie Mowlam: In accordance with convention, correspondence received by Departments from hon. Members is treated in confidence.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Bug

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Council what reports she has received on the extent of damage done to the economies and businesses of those countries which took few or no precautions to deal with the millennium bug. [107509]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

Each country and business had different levels of vulnerability to damage from failures of computerised systems. Many of the countries which are erroneously assumed to have done little benefited from the work of countries like the UK which started earlier.

We have received no reports of serious failures in key infrastructure sectors across the globe, although there have been multiple minor failures in systems. Failures which have come to light so far have been fixed quickly and have not materially affected business as usual.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Council if she will estimate the total cost to (a) the Government and (b) private industry of the steps taken to guard against the millennium bug. [107507]

Mrs. Beckett: Central Government Departments and agencies spent an estimated £380 million on tackling the millennium bug in their own systems.

It is impossible to say how much it cost private industry to deal with the millennium bug. Many of the cost figures quoted so far have been conjured out of the air—nobody knows for certain how much has been spent by private industry in the United Kingdom, or indeed any other country.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Ms Perham: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to amend the Privy Council Office Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 1999–2000. [108490]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate for Class XVII, Vote 5, the Privy Council Office Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £109,000 from £2,166,000 to £2,275,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £109,000 from £2,206,000 to £2,315,000. The increase is the effect of transfers from Cabinet Office Class XVII, Vote 1, £89,000 in respect of expenditure as a result of the Privy Council Office move to new premises, and from Scottish Executive Vote 6, £10,000, and Northern Ireland Executive Programme II DFP, £10,000 in respect of purchases for the Library of the Judicial Committee, Privy Council, following devolution.

The increase will be offset by transfers from the Cabinet Office, the Scottish Executive and the Northern Ireland Executive programme and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Regional Development Agencies

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to ensure that each of the regional development agencies includes agriculture in its development programme. [108378]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

Section 4 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998 charged the RDAs specifically with furthering economic development, investment and employment in rural areas. Subsequent guidance issued by the Government to the RDAs required them to take account of the key role of agriculture in the preparation of their Regional Strategies.

The RDAs' Strategies, which have been broadly welcomed by the Government, include a range of proposals for diversifying the agricultural and rural economies. We are now awaiting the RDAs' detailed Action Plans for implementing their Strategies and we will pay close attention to their priorities for addressing agricultural and rural issues.

Day-old Chicks

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what health checks are carried out on day-old chicks imported into the UK from (a) within and (b) outside the EU. [98591]

Ms Quin: In accordance with European law:

(a) day-old chicks originating in another member state of the EU imported into Great Britain are subject to random post-import documentary, identity and physical veterinary checks at the place of destination, in Great Britain;

(b) day-old chicks originating in a third country may be imported into Great Britain only through an approved Border Inspection Post, where the day-old chicks are subject to documentary and identity checks and, in most cases, to a physical examination.

Poultry Imports

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rules govern the importing of dead poultry into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [102220]

Ms Quin [holding answer 13 December 1999]: Poultry carcases may be imported only in accordance with a licence issued under the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order 1980. The conditions laid down in such licences are designed to protect animal health in Great Britain and vary according to the country of origin and the purposes for which the carcases are imported.

French Beef Ban (Soap)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for the British soap and detergent industry of the French ban on British beef derivatives. [103649]

Ms Quin [holding answer 21 December 1999]: There is no reason why the French ban on Date Based Export Scheme beef should affect the British soap and detergent industry. European Union BSE-related rules, which have been in place since March 1996, currently prevent the export of cosmetic soap made from tallow produced from bovine animals slaughtered in the UK. UK manufacturers may use imported and non-bovine tallow to produce cosmetic soap for export. No BSE-related restrictions apply to exports of non-cosmetic soap and detergent.

Farming Subsidies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers receive total annual subsidies of more than (a) £1,000, (b) £5,000, (c) £10,000, (d) £20,000 and (e) £25,000. [103664]

Ms Quin [holding answer 21 December 1999]: Figures for the number of farmers receiving annual subsidies are unavailable. However figures held by MAFF for the number of UK agricultural holdings which received payments under the Schemes covered by the Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS)[1] in the 1997–98 EAGGF year are as follows:

Figures for the EAGGF[2] year 16 October 1997 to 15 October 1998—number of holdings receiving subsidies under IACS schemes

Milk

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how long the intervention milk price equivalent has been set in euros rather than ecu; what assessment he has made of the effect of the decline of the euro against the pound on UK milk support prices for each 1 per cent. fall in the euro; and if he will estimate the differential in UK milk prices if the IMPE had continued to be set in ecu. [105479]

Ms Quin: The Intervention Milk Price Equivalent (IMPE) is a derived value for the price of the milk which goes into the manufacture of intervention products in the dairy sector. It has no formal basis either in the CAP regime or in UK law and is used only as a commercial negotiating mechanism between milk sellers and purchasers. The Government make no calculation, therefore, of its value. For each 1 per cent. decline in the euro against sterling, EU milk support prices in the UK also fall by 1 per cent.

Pig Sector

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance the Government have given the pig sector since 1 January 1999; and what further assistance his Department plans to give. [105434]

Ms Quin [holding answer 17 January 2000]: The pig sector was eligible for marketing grants under the Agriculture Development Scheme 1999. The scheme closed for applications on 30 November 1999 and successful applications were announced recently. Pig industry projects benefited significantly from the scheme, receiving over 35 per cent. of the total grants made. £3 million of marketing/promotional money was also earmarked exclusively for the pig sector. Discussions with the industry have resulted in the Government part funding a £4.6 million industry-led welfare-linked promotion campaign. This will begin in February and continue through to October.

The "verification officer" appointed by my right hon. Friend the Minister, will continue his work with industry bodies to identify cases where product is being sold at retail or catering level which misleads the consumer into believing it contains pork of British origin when in fact it is imported. He will also continue to check progress on the commitment given some time ago by major retailers that all their own label fresh pork and certain processed products such as bacon would come from stall and tether and Meat and Bone Meal free production systems. Meetings between Ministers and retailers and caterers on all these issues have taken place. The Minister has also written to public authorities encouraging them to purchase their pork supplies to British standards.

EU Flax Regime

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take to ensure that UK farmers, producing short fibre flax, are not discriminated against under the EU flax regime proposals for processing aid. [105611]

Ms Quin: The Commission proposals to bring reform to the flax and hemp sector are broadly welcome, particularly on budgetary grounds.

However, some aspects of the proposals discriminate against UK production and in the negotiating process we shall seek to ensure a more equitable outcome.

GM Maize

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will specify the official procedures to which the GM AgrEvo T25 Maize, covered by Commission Decision 98/293/EC dated 22 April 1998, (a) was subjected and (b) will be subjected for the purpose of assessing its safety for (i) human and (ii) animal consumption. [107266]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The application to market AgrEvo's T25 GM maize was submitted to France in accordance with procedures in Directive 90/220/EEC. The application was subsequently assessed by all Member States, including the UK.

In the UK the application was assessed by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment and the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. The marketing consent permitting importation and cultivation in the EU for use as food and feed ingredients was issued by France in August 1998.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received a copy of the notification under Article 5 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 of AgrEvo T25 modified maize; and if he will place a copy of the notification in the Library. [107541]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 January 2000]: Ingredients derived from AgrEvo T25 modified maize were approved for food use in the UK in February 1997 following a full safety assessment by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP). Details of the Committee's assessment can be found in its 1996 Annual Report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The notification, by AgrEvo under Article 5 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97, containing the ACNFP's assessment report, was transmitted to all Member States on 6 February 1998. No one objected to the notification.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes submitted to the European Commission under Article 5 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 in respect of AgrEvo's T25 genetically modified maize. [107784]

Ms Quin [holding answer 31 January 2000]: The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes' report on food ingredients derived from AgrEvo's T25 genetically modified maize is contained in their 1996 annual report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the notifications of which he has received copies from the EC under Article 5 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 since 1 January 1999. [107783]

Ms Quin [holding answer 31 January 2000]: Since 1 January 1999 three notifications under Article 5 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 have been received. These relate to the placing on the market of processed oil from the following three varieties of genetically modified oilseed rape:

1. Falcon GS 40/90—AgrEvo
2. Male sterile MS8, fertility restorer RF3, all conventional crosses from these and the hybrid combination (MS8xRF3)—Plant Genetic Systems
3. Liberator L62—AgrEvo.

These notifications are based on an assessment by the German competent authority.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific scientific factors he or his advisers apply in determining whether a particular food or food ingredient contains or consists of genetically modified organisms, for the purposes of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 or otherwise. [107837]

Ms Quin [holding answer 31 January 2000]: For the purposes of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 food or food ingredients containing or consisting of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) refers to products where GMOs, as defined in article 2(2) of Directive 90/220/EEC, are present. In this definition, an organism is a biological entity capable of replication or of transferring genetic material.

Tallow (Support Fuel)

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much tallow produced as a by-product of rendering under the over-30 month scheme contracts is used as support fuel. [107932]

Ms Quin: As at 31 December 1999 some 86,165 tonnes of tallow produced from the rendering of animals under the over-30-month scheme had been burnt in rendering plants as replacement fuel.

Organic Farming

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total (a) number and (b) value of grants made under the organic farming scheme since its introduction. [107561]

Mr. Morley: Since the introduction of the Organic Farming Scheme in April 1999, 693 applications have been approved with a grant value of £7.9 million for the current financial year and a forecast value of £9.4 million for the remaining years of the Scheme. A further 483 grant applications are being processed.

Tom Lang's Craft Butchers, Ashburton

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will grant a square stamp licence to Henry Lang of Tom Lang's Craft Butchers and Abattoir in Ashburton for a throughput of 50 units per week. [106057]

Ms Quin [holding answer 31 January 2000]: This abattoir is licensed as a low throughput slaughterhouse, which allows a maximum throughput of 20 livestock units per week. It has sought licensing as a full throughput slaughterhouse to allow a higher weekly throughput, but recently contacted MAFF officials and advised them that it no longer wishes to seek this status. The abattoir is instead pursuing, in close consultation with MAFF officials, an option under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 (as amended) which allows low throughput slaughterhouses to deal with up to 30 livestock units per week, provided certain conditions are met.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to amend the House of Commons Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000. [108471]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XVIII, Vote 4 (House of Commons: Members Salaries etc) the House of Commons Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–200 will be increased by £3,311,000 from £273,236,000. The increase is the net effect of increases in financial assistance to Opposition parties and other current expenditure.

The increase will be a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Second Chamber

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will place in the Library the instructions and terms of reference of the contract placed with PricewaterhouseCoopers to advise on persons suitable for membership of the second chamber. [107620]

Mrs. Beckett: PricewaterhouseCoopers Executive Search and Selection have not been employed to advise on persons suitable for membership of the second chamber. They have been employed to assist in the recruitment of the Chairman and three independent members of the House of Lords Appointments Commission.

The invitation to tender document sent to PricewaterhouseCoopers by the Cabinet Office included relevant passages from the White paper 'Modernising Parliament Reforming the House of Lords', a draft remit of the Appointments Commission and a draft job and person specification. PricewaterhouseCoopers used this document as the starting point of their work.

I have placed a copy of the 'invitation to tender' document and the standard terms and conditions of the Cabinet Office in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Crown Courts

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in relation to criminal cases that can be tried either way in the magistrates or Crown courts, if he will say, for each of the last three years (a) how many cases in which the defendant elected for trial in the Crown court resulted in a plea of guilty at the Crown court, (b) in relation to the cases, identified at (a), how many defendants were on legal aid, (c) what was (i) the total, (ii) the highest and (iii) the medium cost to the legal aid budget of the cases identified at (b), and (d) what he estimates the cost to the legal aid system would have been, for the statistics identified at (c), if the cases identified at (a) had been tried on a guilty plea in the magistrates court. [107846]

Mr. Lock: The information required is not held centrally by the Department and could, therefore, be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108399]

Mr. Lock: Information in respect of correspondence between hon. Members and Departments is treated in confidence unless the originating hon. Member chooses to make this public. It is not therefore possible to provide the information requested.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to amend the Lord Chancellor's Department's departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for 1999–2000. [108980]

Mr. Lock: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class V, Votes 1, 2 and 3 the Lord Chancellor's Department Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £26,934,000 from £2,421,244,000 to £2,448,178,000. The increase is the net effect of a transfer for £505,000 from the Department of Social Security relating to the costs of recruiting and re-appointing panel members for Unified Appeals Tribunals; a transfer from the Reserve for £25,000,000 in respect of the additional legal aid costs following implementation of the Narey reforms; a transfer to the Home Office for £200,000 in respect of a contribution towards the costs of the IBIS (Integrating Business and Information Systems) Criminal Justice System Unit; and take up of End Year Flexibility entitlement in the sum of £1,629,000.

The running cost limit for Lord Chancellor's Department Class V, Vote 1 will be increased by £23,167,000 from £502,203,000 to £525,370,000. The increase is in respect of a £380,000 transfer from the Department of Social Security relating to costs in respect of recruiting and re-appointing panel members for the Unified Appeals Tribunals; a £200,000 transfer to the Home Office in respect of a contribution towards the cost of the IBIS Unit; an increase of £695,000 to meet additional costs of the ARAMIS PFI project, an increase of £19,550,000 following reclassification of expenditure as a result of the impact of the changes in ESA 95; and an increase of £2,742,000 following a transfer from other current expenditure to meet the additional costs in respect of Asylum and Immigration.

The running cost limit for Northern Ireland Court Service, Class V, Vote 2 will be increased by £679,000 from £29,960,000 to £30,636,000. The increase is as a result of take up of End Year Flexibility entitlement.

The running cost limit for Public Records Office, Class V, Vote 3 will be increased by £2,908,000 from £25,842,000 to £28,750,000. This increase is as a result of a £900,000 increase funded by a grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund, in respect of a project to microfilm World War One Soldier's documents; a £200,000 increase relating to expenditure on wholesale publishing and book purchases, which is funded by additional wider market receipts generated by retail sales; a £950,000 increase in respect of End Year Flexibility entitlement; a £2,558,000 increase to meet additional costs in respect of Capital Charges on the Civil Estate, and a £1,700,000 reduction following virement into capital expenditure relating to developments in online services.

The increases will be offset by a transfer from the Department of Social Security Departmental Expenditure Limit, a grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund, and charges on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Broadcasting Act 1996

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will publish proposals for reform of the Broadcasting Act; and if he will make a statement. [108981]

Mr. Chris Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I propose to publish a White Paper later this year setting out the Government's proposals for reform of the framework of communications legislation. This will include proposals for changing both the Telecommunications and Broadcasting Acts as a basis for legislation when parliamentary time allows. The White Paper will accordingly be broad in its scope, covering both infrastructure and content issues. It will draw on responses to the options for reform of the broadcasting and telecommunications framework set out in the Government's June 1999 statement "Regulating Communications: The Way Ahead" and will take full account of emerging conclusions from the current review of the European Union regulatory framework for communications. The work will be taken forward by a joint DTI/DCMS team to ensure a coherent and consistent approach to the regulation of the converging communications industries.

Consultants

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies have spent on external consultants and advisers since May 1997. [102075]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 13 December 1999]: The table provides the latest available information provided by my Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies. It includes expenditure (for example, professional fees) connected with lottery projects.

Asset Sales

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the items in the National Asset Register sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies since 1 March 1999, stating in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total amount raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [104501]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department itself has realised £6,000 from the sale of printers and servers since March 1999 and its agency, the Royal Parks Agency, has sold a building and computer equipment which generated proceeds of £120,281. The information available for the Department's associated public bodies is as listed by asset category which is in the format shown in the National Asset Register. The total proceeds from asset sales by associated public bodies amounts to £1,624,670.

Departmental Consultation

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the public consultation exercises on policy matters carried out by his Department and its agencies in each of the last five years; who was consulted and by what means; how responses were analysed; how and in what form the results were transmitted to those responsible for the consultation; how the results of the consultation were published; and what analysis has been carried out of the extent and nature of policy changes resulting from the consultation. [106304]

Mr. Chris Smith: Public consultation is a routine element of policy formulation in the Department and its sponsored bodies. We do not, however, keep a central systematic record of the many and various consultation exercises we have conducted. This information requested by my hon. Friend could therefore be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Premier League

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last met the Chairman of the Premier League; where the meeting took place; and what subjects were discussed. [106555]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the Chairman of the FA Premier League on 16 September 1999 at the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. I was also present at that meeting, at which a range of football issues were discussed.

Wembley Monitoring Committee

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what dates the Wembley Monitoring Committee has met; if he will list those present at each meeting; and if he will publish the minutes of the meetings. [106556]

Kate Hoey: The dates and attendees at meetings of the National Stadium Monitoring Committee meetings are as listed. The minutes of these meetings cover the views of representatives of non-governmental organisations who took part in those meetings on the understanding that discussions were in confidence, and it would not, therefore, be appropriate for them to be published.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what advice he has received from the Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment concerning the design of the new Wembley Stadium. [107135]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment (CABE) forwarded to the Secretary of State a copy of its letter of 16 December to Lord Foster of Thames Bank. This letter strongly supported the design which would meet the primary function of a football stadium, and noted how it could be converted for an athletics event but that it was essential that this provision should not compromise the stadium when used for football. CABE further stressed the importance of the work of the Wembley Task Force in ensuring the surrounding area provides a fitting environment.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) on what date the Ellerbe Beckett report into Wembley Stadium was first received by his Department; [107136]

(2) on what date the Ellerbe Beckett report into Wembley Stadium was first made available to (a) Sport England, (b) UK Athletics, (c) the British Olympic Association and (d) Wembley National Stadium Ltd. [107137]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 27 January 2000]: We received the DLA: Ellerbe Beckett report on Monday 29 November 1999.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 384W, on Wembley Stadium, if he will list the interested parties with which his Department held discussions; on what date those discussions were held; and if he will make a statement. [107182]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 27 January 2000]: Between the statement in the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 1 December 1999, Official Report, columns 305-06 and the announcement on 22 December, discussions were held with Sport England, UK Sport, UK Athletics, the British Olympic Association, Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and the Football Association.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 December 1999, Official Report, column 306, which bodies advised him that it seemed unlikely that Wembley could provide an appropriate venue for the World Athletics Championships. [107299]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 28 January 2000]: The conclusions were drawn from the Ellerbe Beckett report. While Wembley National Stadium Ltd. subsequently addressed many of the issues outlined in a statement on 1 December 1999, the proposed solution was not the ideal for athletics as it required substantial investment without a lasting athletics legacy and would not have been suitable as the centrepiece for any future Olympic bid.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 163W, when (i) he and (ii) ministers in his Department first discussed the ideal focal point for the new Wembley Stadium in athletics mode with (a) Sport England, (b) Wembley National Stadium Ltd and (c) UK Athletics. [107838]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 31 January 2000]: Stadium Australia, which I understand has minimum C60 sightlines based on a focal point on the outside edge of the outside line around the whole track, has set the current benchmark for quality of sightlines required for the Olympics. This was acknowledged by the Wembley design team at the recent Culture, Media and Sport Select Committee inquiry into Wembley. We were assured throughout the project that the new Wembley would be capable of being upgraded for Olympics. However, it became clear once we had seen the detailed proposals for Olympic configuration in early October last year, that Wembley did not meet this benchmark and brought into question the possibility of Wembley being the centrepiece of a future Olympic bid.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 163W, what assessment he has made of the extent to which the standards for the focal point and sight lines in the new Wembley Stadium with 80,000 seats in athletics mode are matched or exceeded by the other stadia in Europe with capacities in excess of 75,000. [107839]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 31 January 2000]: My Department has made no specific assessment of the Wembley proposals against other stadia in Europe. In respect of the Wembley proposals we were concerned to ensure that we did not rule out the possibility of a future Olympic bid. The report from Ellerbe Beckett along with evidence from the BOA and my officials who attended the Wembley National Stadium Ltd. mock up of the proposed seating, confirmed the inadequacy of the sightlines in 80,000 athletics mode.

National Lottery

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many grant applications to the National Lottery have been received from organisations within the Mitcham and Morden constituency; and how many have been successful. [107946]

Kate Hoey: The following table shows the number of applications and awards for each of the National Lottery distributing bodies to organisations in the Mitcham and Morden constituency, based on information provided by the National Lottery distributing bodies. The figure for applications received includes applications that have not yet been processed.

Distributing body	Number of applications received	Number of awards made
Arts Council of England	6	4
Heritage Lottery Fund	6	1
Film Council	0	0
Millennium Commission	Not known	2
National Lottery Charities Board	115	27
New Opportunities Fund	1	0
Sport England	4	1
UK Sport	0	0

Sport England

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner), of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 87W, on what date the Football Association proposed that £20 million be returned to Sport England; what form this proposal took; and where the proposal was made. [107296]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 28 January 2000]: An informal proposal was made by David Richards, Chairman of the FA Premier League on 16 December 1999 in the margins of a meeting at No. 10 to discuss the proposed Football Foundation. This was relayed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by DCMS officials and followed up by more formal discussions between my Department and the Football Association. These concluded with the meeting between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and Mr. Ken Bates on 22 December 1999 at which it was agreed that £20 million would be returned over the next five years, with best endeavours to repay the money more quickly if possible. The precise details of the repayment are matters for Sport England and the Football Association.

Irish Culture

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department is taking to promote Irish (a) culture, (b) arts and (c) sports in Britain. [107587]

Mr. Chris Smith: It is my Department's job to promote all cultural and sporting activities in the UK. Irish culture is just one of the many diverse cultures that are promoted by, for example, the Arts Council of England and the Regional Arts Boards. My Department is also in close touch with its counterpart in Dublin on a number of issues. Gaelic games such as football, hurling and camogie are all recognised by Sport England and are eligible for lottery funding. Recently St. Albans' Irish Association received a grant of £51,617 towards improving their facilities to benefit Gaelic football.

Playing Fields

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Employment about increasing the provision of sports playing fields available to schools. [108132]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with ministerial colleagues in the Department for Education and Employment on a wide range of issues of mutual interest including the important issue of increasing the provision of playing fields available to schools.

Athletics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the level of public subsidy required if Britain hosts the International Amateur Athletics Federation World Championships in 2005. [108073]

Kate Hoey: The Chief Executive of Manchester City Council has written to my officials enclosing a copy of a paper written by a firm of Canadian consultants dated 23 January 2000, which suggests that the net event costs of staging the World Athletics Championships would be in the region of £15 million. UK Athletics have in principle agreement from Sport England of £15 million Lottery funding towards event costs for the 2005 World Athletics Championships and this is the figure included in the UK Athletics outline bid submitted to the International Amateur Athletics Federation on 31 January 2000.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the necessary additional spending required by his Department in order for Britain to host the International Amateur Athletics Federation World Championship in 2005. [108074]

Kate Hoey: Following the decision to remove athletics from Wembley, my Department is now co-ordinating urgent work between the Government Office for London, Sport England, UK Sport, UK Athletics and the British Olympic Association on further developing the bid for the 2005 World Athletics Championships which takes account of a possible future Olympic bid, including the level of public or Lottery funding that may be required.

World Class Programme

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about funding the World Class Programme from National Lottery funds. [107967]

Kate Hoey: To date approximately £90 million of National Lottery funds has been committed by Sport England and UK Sport to over 40 sporting activities, helping over 2,200 elite athletes under the World Class Programme.

School Sports

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many schools in the Government's action zones have received National Lottery funds to develop sporting opportunities. [107969]

Kate Hoey: Five schools located within the recently announced Sport Action Zones have received National Lottery awards from Sport England. The details are as follows:

School	Local authority	Amount awarded (£)	Scheme
Newquay Tretherras School	Restormel	136,073	Artificial hockey pitch
Fowey Community School	Restormel	1,190,339	Sport and leisure complex
Callington School and Community College	Caradon	75,000	Phase 11 of college sports facilities project
Liskeard School and Community College	Caradon	259,624	Artificial hockey pitch
Cape Cornwall Community	Penwith	578,473	Sports hall and car park

A further six schools located in areas where Sport Action Zones have been set up have also received awards. However, in these areas the boundaries of the Zones have not been finalised and some of those schools may not be in the eventually designated Zone. Details are as follows:

School	Local authority	Amount awarded (£)	Scheme
Rossington High School Boat Club	Doncaster	18,640	Purchase of boats
Thomas Rotherham College	Rotherham	491,941	Construction of new sports hall
St. Bernard's RC School	Rotherham	13,800	All weather cricket pitch and practice nets
Small Heath GM School	Birmingham	1,605,083	All weather playing surfaces
Arthur Terry School	Birmingham	732,965	Sports hall refurbishment
Baverstock Grant Maintained School	Birmingham	14,124	Table tennis development project to include disabled people

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lebanon

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent talks he has had with the Israeli Government concerning the withdrawal of Israeli troops from South Lebanon. [108065]

Mr. Hain: We have regular high-level contact with the Israeli Government. We discuss all aspects of the peace process. The Government support the implementation of UNSCR 425. There is now a real prospect of Israeli withdrawal from South Lebanon. It is the responsibility of all those involved to ensure that any Israeli withdrawal is orderly and carried out within a framework that ensures stability.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made concerning the welfare of the Christian population of South Lebanon in the event of an Israeli withdrawal from the region. [108064]

Mr. Hain: Stability will be crucial to ensuring that the rights of all communities in Lebanon are safeguarded. It is the responsibility of all those involved to ensure that any Israeli withdrawal from South Lebanon is orderly and carried out within a framework which ensures stability.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his international colleagues concerning (a) the withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon and (b) the protection of a Christian enclave until that has occurred. [108063]

Mr. Hain: I discuss the Middle East Peace Process regularly with EU and other colleagues. The Government support United Nations Security Council Resolutions 520 and 425. We look forward to the Lebanese Government's full exercise of its authority throughout the country. We monitor the human rights situation in Lebanon, as in the rest of the Middle East and elsewhere.

Egypt

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the Egyptian Government regarding the political representation of Christians. [108062]

Mr. Hain: When my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited Cairo in January this year, he met the Sheikh of Al Azar and Bishop Daniel as well as members of the Government, including the President. Interfaith issues were part of the discussions.

Congo

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the UK has to provide troops to a peacekeeping force in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [108058]

Mr. Hain: The UK is providing six military liaison officers to the UN Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUC). The Security Council is considering the Secretary General's recommendations for a large UN observer force to monitor the ceasefire. We are ready, in principle, to support this force and are keeping under review what more we may be able to provide.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what notifications from the Joint Military Committee and MONUC of breaches of the Lusaka ceasefire in the Democratic Republic of Congo since its signing he has received; and how many of these ceasefire breaches involved Zimbabwean troops. [108057]

Mr. Hain: Since the signing of the Lusaka Agreement there have been allegations of ceasefire violations by both sides in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo. We strongly condemn all such violations.

We continue to urge the parties to report any ceasefire violations to the Joint Military Committee, which is mandated under the Lusaka Agreement to monitor compliance and resolve disputes.

At the open meeting of the Security Council on DRC in New York last week all parties reaffirmed their support for Lusaka and its principles and their commitment to its implementation.

Iran

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 580W, what sources of information, other than Iranian press reports, concerning the affiliations and roles of Globad Mansour-Beigi, Reza Molai and Ali-Hosseini, he has evaluated. [107954]

Mr. Hain: The Iranian media reports referred to in my previous answer described the three people killed in the Mujaheddin-e-Khalq Organisation's attack on the town of Ilam as civilians. Whatever their affiliation, this was an act of terrorism, which I strongly condemn.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Iranian Government on the position of women in Iran in relation to the report by the UN Rapporteur on Human Rights. [108148]

Mr. Hain: We and our EU partners regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our concerns over a number of their human rights policies, including the situation of women in Iran. The EU sponsored UN General Assembly Resolution on human rights in Iran, adopted on 17 December, called for further action by the Iranian Government to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by women of their human rights.

The Special Rapporteur's report of September 1999 expressed concern over certain women's rights issues and also highlighted a number of improvements. He particularly welcomed the efforts of the Iranian President and other senior figures in the executive to press for a change in attitude towards women and women's issues. He also welcomed the greater participation of Iranian women in politics and higher education.

Pakistan

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on persecution of Christians in Pakistan in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [107948]

Mr. Hain: We have received a number of reports about the position of Christians in Pakistan and have raised our concerns with the Pakistani authorities. Our High Commission in Islamabad maintains a regular dialogue with Christian and human rights groups and the Pakistani authorities on this issue. Since the coup on 12 October 1999, General Musharraf has promised Pakistan's minorities that their rights would be respected and that they would be treated as equal citizens. We shall continue to monitor the situation closely and raise our concerns.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his Egyptian counterpart on the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development peace initiative for Sudan. [108129]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has discussed the Sudan with his Egyptian counterpart on a number of occasions, most recently in Cairo on 20 January. Our objective is to see a comprehensive negotiated settlement in the interests of all Sudanese. We continue to support the IGAD initiative as the best vehicle for actioning this.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received concerning the displacement of Nuer from the area surrounding the oil fields in Southern Sudan. [108145]

Mr. Hain: We are aware of reports of displacement of people in Upper Nile to places such as Bentiu and Yirol as a result of factional fighting. We expect to see further reports on this issue from a Canadian study which we understand may be published in the near future.

Taiwan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Taiwan on the economic consequences of the earthquake that took place last year in Taiwan. [108173]

Mr. Battle: None. The British Trade and Cultural Office in Taipei reports regularly on economic developments. The economic consequences of last September's earthquake have been comprehensively covered in the course of that reporting.

The human cost of the earthquake was severe and tragic. The United Kingdom joined many other members of the international community in contributing to the relief effort.

Economic dislocation proved to be less grave than the Taiwan authorities initially feared. Considering the magnitude of the tremor, infrastructural damage to industrial premises was relatively light, the bulk of lost industrial output being caused by disruption in power supplies. Economic indicators show that Taiwan's economic performance has now returned to at or near its pre-September level.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals there are to amend his Department's expenditure and running costs limit for 1999–2000. [108810]

Mr. Hain: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class VII Vote 1 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Departmental Expenditure limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £5,157,000 from £1,171,240,000 to £1,176,397,000 and the running cost limit has been decreased by £32,614,000 from £530,968,000 to £498,354,000. The increase is the net effect of:

(i) a decrease of £5,326,000 in respect of an adjustment for Overseas Price Movements;

(ii) a decrease in the running cost limit of £1,011,000, in respect of the cash limit breach for financial year 1998–99;

(iii) an increase of £2,000,000 in both capital expenditure and appropriations in-aid for FCO Estates Rationalisation;

(iv) a net decrease in the running costs limit of £5,238,000 and an increase in capital of £5,238,000, in respect of reclassification of certain items of current and capital expenditure in line with FCO's Resource Accounting policies;

(v) a transfer of £600,000 from the Home Office (Class 4, Vote 1), in respect of certain overseas drugs assistance programmes;

(vi) a transfer of £56,000 to the Home Office (Class IV, Vote 2), in respect of the Human Rights Project Fund;

(vii) a transfer of £100,000 from the Ministry of Defence (Class VI, Vote 1), in respect of their contribution to the grant-in-aid to the Atlantic Council of the UK;

(viii) a transfer of £750,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 2) for capital expenditure;

(ix) an increase in both running cost limit and in appropriations-in-aid of £25,000, in respect of Sales into Wider Markets;

(x) an increase in running cost receipts of £24,675,000 and an increase in running cost expenditure of £500,000, in respect of increased receipts from other Government Departments;

(xi) The Supplementary Estimate is also sought for additional provision of £40,070,000 on Section B for UK contributions to United Nations Missions in the former Yugoslavia (includes) UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo) and the former Soviet Union, United Nations Special Commission on Iraq, United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observer Mission, United Nations Mission for the Referendum on Western Sahara, United Nations Police Mission in Haiti, United Nations Mission in East Timor, United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, United Nations Peacekeeping Operation in Central African Republic, United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone, United Nations Observer Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo, the United Nations International Criminal Tribunals for Yugoslavia and Rwanda, the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission and Western European Union Police Mission in Albania. This is partially offset by an increase of £4,800,000 in appropriations-in-aid in respect of non-baseline peacekeeping;

(xii) The Supplementary Estimate is also required to note an increase of £505,000 in Section D, in respect of an adjustment for Overseas Price Movements for the British Council.

The increase will be offset by a transfer from another Departmental Expenditure Limit (DfID) and a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters he has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the oath of allegiance. [108401]

Mr. Robin Cook: Correspondence between hon. Members and Departments is treated in confidence unless the originating Member chooses to make such issues public. I am therefore unable to provide the information requested.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 4 February 2000

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the Cabinet Office Security and Intelligence Services Vote departmental expenditure limit for 1999–2000. [109085]

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the departmental expenditure limit for Class XVII, Vote 2 will be increased by £26,030,000 from £742,947,000 to £768,977,000 and the gross running cost limit will be increased by £30,468,000 from £380,067,000 to £410,535,000.

The change is to effect transfers of £2,500,000 to the Ministry of Defence (Class VI, Vote 1) and £750,000 from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Class II, Vote 1), the take up of running costs end year flexibility of £3,698,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 393W. It also provides for an increase in the departmental expenditure limit of £24,175,000 for services bought from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the reclassification of £10,280,000 from capital to other current expenditure and of £1,790,000 from annual managed expenditure to departmental expenditure limit.

There will be an increase in Appropriations in Aid of £5,651,000 and a net increase in other current expenditure of £4,942,000.

The increases in provision will be offset by transfers or increased receipts, or charged to the Reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Accommodation

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will list each unit of accommodation in the House indicating the persons to whom it is allocated. [108330]

Sir Sydney Chapman: I regret that the information requested is held on the parliamentary space audit database, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. If my right hon. Friend has a particular query he wishes to raise, he should refer it to the Serjeant at Arms.

DEFENCE

Gulf War

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what arrangements for the award of war pensions and other forms of compensation apply to (a) military personnel and (b) British civilians (i) contracted and (ii) seconded to the forces who served in the war theatre during the Gulf conflict; [107279]

(2) if he will compensate British civilians seconded or contracted to the forces in the war theatre during the Gulf conflict who have subsequently become ill as a result of their secondment. [107282]

Mr. Spellar: For Armed Forces personnel, there are two schemes to compensate for death or injury caused by Service: the War Pension Scheme (WPS) administered by the DSS and the Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) administered by MOD. When both Departments accept that the death or injury is attributable to service, benefits are payable from both schemes. In addition to pension arrangements, compensation is also payable from the MOD if it can be proved that an individual's death or injury was caused by negligence by the Department. This compensation system is applied to injuries or death in wartime, but the Department is not required to pay common law compensation if the injury or death occurred where the claimant was actively engaging the enemy. Individuals injured or killed in this scenario receive benefits from the WPS and the AFPS.

In regard to civilians, civil servants are covered by the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (PCSPS). This provides for the payment of death and injury benefits to those who are killed or sustain injuries attributable to their duties. Civilians who are employees of contractors do not participate in the PCSPS (or the AFPS or WPS), but would be entitled to common law compensation where the Department was liable. MOD civil servants are also entitled to seek common law compensation from their employer.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British civilians (a) seconded and (b) contracted to Her Majesty's forces in the war theatre during the Gulf conflict were subsequently tested for (i) depleted uranium and (b) other uranium; and with what results. [107281]

Mr. Spellar: My Department's policy on testing Gulf veterans was published in "Testing for the presence of depleted uranium in UK veterans of the Gulf conflict: The Current Position" dated 19 March 1999, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Under this policy, as at 31 January 2000, my Department had arranged for one civilian veteran's urine to be tested at two laboratories. The results from one laboratory using neutron activation methods showed that the uranium-235 concentration was less than 0.0053 micrograms per litre (µg/l) of urine. The concentration of natural uranium was less than 0.73 µg/l and that the concentration of depleted uranium (uranium -235 content of about 0.2 per cent.) was less than 2.6 µg/l. This result represented the limits of detection by the method used. If uranium was present it was below these concentrations. The second laboratory's results using a different method (Laser Phosphorimetry) were that total uranium concentration was 0.0052 (+/– 0.00076) µg/l. Both sets of test results show that uranium, in any form, is not a contributory factor to the patient's ill-health.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British civilians (a) seconded and (b) contracted to Her Majesty's forces in the war theatre during the Gulf conflict have subsequently suffered from (a) post-traumatic stress disorder, (b) nephrotic syndrome and (c) other kidney or renal problems. [107283]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has no mechanisms in place for routinely monitoring the health of its civilian employees, ex-employees, contractors' employees or foreign nationals. However, civilians who provided direct support to British Forces in theatre during the Gulf conflict can be referred by their GP for examination at the MOD's Medical Assessment Programme (MAP). As at 27 January 2000, 63 civilians who went to the Gulf had been seen by MAP physicians. Of these: two were diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder; one had nephrotic syndrome; and none were diagnosed with kidney or renal problems, other than nephrotic syndrome.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the number of British civilians seconded or contracted to Her Majesty's Forces in the war theatre during the Gulf conflict who were exposed to uranium. [107303]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 2000]: We have no such estimate.

Nuclear Weapons

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps he is taking to inform Parliament of (a) the amount spent on nuclear weapons research and (b) plans for research or work on future nuclear weapons systems; [107597]

(2) what plans the Government have to fund further work or research on the Trident warhead and its individual components; and at what cost; [107736]

(3) what (a) work and (b) research the Government are funding on future nuclear weapons systems and on the components of such systems; and at what cost. [107737]

Mr. Hoon: Supporting Essay 5 of the Strategic Defence Review White Paper (Cm 3999) provided details of the costs of the nuclear warhead programme in 1997–98. Direct Trident Warhead Related Expenditure is expected to continue at around £120 million per annum (at 1998–99 prices) for the life of the system, of which some £70 million is in support of Research, Development and Capability Maintenance activities. Although research is aimed at stewardship of the Trident warhead, it also ensures the maintenance of a minimum capability to design and produce a successor should this prove necessary.

Exercise Winter Training

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of individual places available on Exercise Winter Training in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [107411]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of places available
1997–98	1,620
1998–99	1,620
1999–2000	1,080

RAF Pilots

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours' flying time pilots completed in the RAF in each of the last five years, excluding operational flying. [107245]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 27 January 2000]: Trained RAF pilots completed the following flying hours:

Years	Hours [1]	Hours [2]	Total hours
1995	164,686	20,012	184,698
1996	198,892	15,154	214,046

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the Charter of Fundamental Rights on employment practice within the armed forces; what representations he has made on the issue; and if he will make a statement. [106374]

Mr. Spellar: None as yet. The Government see no reason for the Charter to add to existing rights and obligations, nor is there any agreement that it should so do.

DERA

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his plans for the defence budget assume a receipt arising from the sale of all or part of the Defence Estimate and Research Agency. [107413]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 1 February 2000]: For outline planning purposes, we have assumed that a Public Private Partnership (PPP) for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency will generate a receipt for the Exchequer and that an element of this will form a credit to the defence budget. The size of any receipt will depend on the PPP option chosen and no final decision on this has yet been made.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Commission for Racial Equality

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who he is appointing as the new Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality. [109086]

Mr. Straw: I am very glad to announce that I have today appointed Gurbux Singh as Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Gurbux Singh is currently the Chief Executive of the London Borough of Haringey and a member of my Race Relations Forum. The appointment is for four years initially.

Crime Fighting Fund

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce the results of the bids which police forces in England and Wales have made for money from the Crime Fighting Fund to fund the recruitment of police officers. [109087]

Mr. Straw: I am currently considering the bids which forces have made. I will be announcing the results next week.

Religious Discrimination

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the University of Derby's research project into religious discrimination, which he commissioned in April 1999. [109088]

Mr. Straw: The interim report of the University of Derby's research project into religious discrimination was published on 31 January. Copies are available in the Library or from the research project's web-site at: www.multifaithnet.org.

The interim report is useful in beginning to develop a better understanding of the complex issues around religious discrimination. We hope it will inform the debate in advance of the publication of the research project's full findings, due this autumn.

It is important to remember that this is an interim report only (based on a literature review and consultation with relevant organisations): it does not yet include any information from the research project's own data collection, which is continuing. The final report will inform the development of policy in this important and sensitive area.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the sources of primates used for research in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [108144]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In 1997, the overseas sources of primates were Mauritius, Philippines, China, Israel and Switzerland.

In 1998, the overseas sources were Mauritius, Philippines, China, Israel, Kenya, South Africa and the United States of America.

The vast majority of these imports, for both years were for Cynomolgus Macaques, the main source being Mauritius. Very few were bred in the United Kingdom.

A small number of Marmosets were imported from overseas sources as these, and other New World primates, were bred mainly at designated establishments in the United Kingdom.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library Fenella Tayler's letter of 5 November 1999 to Michael Caplan, acting for Senator Pinochet; [108463]

(2) what were the contents of Fenella Tayler's letter of 26 November 1999 on behalf of the Home Office to Michael Caplan, acting for Senator Pinochet. [108459]

Mr. Straw: I have placed in the Library copies of the correspondence relating to the medical report which has been disclosed in the application brought by Amnesty International and other human rights groups for permission to bring judicial review proceedings against the Secretary of State.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons the Director of Public Prosecutions was not consulted under Article 7 of the UN Convention on Torture about his decision to abandon the extradition proceedings against Senator Pinochet consequent on the medical examination; and what representations he has received from the Director of Public Prosecutions on this matter; [108637]

(2) if the medical report on Senator Pinochet has been tendered under Article 7 of the UN Convention on Torture for examination by the (a) DPP and (b) Solicitor-General; and if he will make a statement; [108598]

(3) on which date and by what instrument the (a) DPP and (b) Solicitor-General indicated their approval, in accordance with Article 7 of the United Nation's Convention on Torture, of the Home Secretary's decision on the abandonment of the extradition proceedings against Senator Pinochet consequent on his medical examination. [108460]

Mr. Straw: Article 7(1) of the Convention states that:

"The State Party in the territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in Article 4 is found shall in the cases contemplated in Article 5, if it does not extradite him, submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution".

I have not yet taken a decision on whether to bring the extradition proceedings against Senator Pinochet to an end.

As I indicated in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 560W, a copy of the medical report on Senator Pinochet was forwarded to the Solicitor-General and Director of Public Prosecutions on 11 January.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what purpose Fenella Tayler (a) wrote to and (b) telephoned Michael Caplan, acting for Senator Pinochet, on 11 November 1999, concerning a request that the report of doctors who had examined Senator Pinochet be brought to the attention of Spain, France, Belgium and Switzerland; and what was (i) his response and (ii) the date of his response. [108461]

Mr. Straw: I have placed Mrs. Tayler's letter of 11 January to Mr. Caplan (to which I assume the Question refers) and his reply of 11 January, clarified by a further letter of 13 January, along with related correspondence, in the Library. As Mrs. Tayler's letter explains, Senator Pinochet's solicitors were asked to agree urgently that the report of the doctors should be disclosed to the four states with an outstanding extradition application relating to Senator Pinochet. Senator Pinochet's solicitors replied on the same day, refusing the request.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason Fenella Tayler's letter of 5 November 1999 to Senator Pinochet's lawyers offered to keep confidential the report of the doctors who were to examine the Senator. [108458]

Mr. Straw: Assurances of confidentiality were given because it appeared to me (i) that Senator Pinochet had a right, subject to any overriding public interest, to have personal information about his health kept confidential, (ii) because I wished to have authoritative advice about Senator Pinochet's state of health and I was conscious that he had no obligation to submit to a medical examination, and (iii) that it was appropriate to ask Senator Pinochet for his consent only for the purpose for which I needed the information, namely to equip myself to perform my own functions and to enable the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Solicitor-General to perform theirs.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which (a) Chilean and (b) British doctor was nominated by Senator Pinochet's lawyers to witness the consideration of the doctors' report on Senator Pinochet, by the DPP or Solicitor-General; when this meeting was held; and if he will make a statement. [108462]

Mr. Straw: No such nomination or meeting has taken place. Two doctors nominated by Senator Pinochet's legal representatives did observe the medical examination on Senator Pinochet conducted at my request.

Overstayers

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people with visitors' visas overstayed where the country of origin was (a) Pakistan and (b) India, in each year since May 1997. [108502]

Mrs. Roche: Comprehensive information on the numbers of persons originating from Pakistan and India who have overstayed their leave in the United Kingdom, having originally entered on visit visas, is not available. The available information, which relates to the numbers of those nationals issued with notice of intention to deport on the grounds that they have overstayed, is shown in the following table. Central records do not show how many of those persons had obtained a visit visa.

Nationals of Pakistan and India issued with notice of intention to deport as overstayers, May 1997 to November 1998.

Nationality	May to December 1997	January to November 1998 [1]
Pakistan	340	400
India	220	210

[1] Figures are provisional. Data for December 1998 onwards are not yet available.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest ten.

Correspondence

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter dated 15 October 1999 that he received from the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling enclosing correspondence from Mr. D. C. Johnson. [108647]

Mrs. Roche: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 3 February.

City Status

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in the award of city status. [108455]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Her Majesty the Queen has said that she intends to mark the Millennium by a grant of city status. A competition was announced in May 1999 with a closing date of 1 September. Thirty-nine applications have been received from towns in the United Kingdom; each application is being considered on its individual merits. No date has yet been set for the announcement of the result.

Ad Hop Scheme

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people came to Britain on the Ad Hop scheme in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999. [107950]

Mrs. Roche: The Ad Hop scheme is not known to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. If the hon. Member is referring to the Seasonal Agricultural Workers' Scheme, the annual quota of participants is 10,000. HOPS(GB), one of the approved operators, was allocated 3,517 work cards in 1998 and 1999.

SOCIAL SECURITY

New Deal (Lone Parents)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents, under the New Deal for Lone Parents, have (a) been issued with initial invitation letters, (b) booked initial interviews with personal advisers, (c) attended initial interviews, (d) agreed to participate in the programme, (e) been referred to Employment Service programmes or other training, (f) obtained jobs following participation and (g) have increased their hours of work following participation. [108001]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

	Results for the National Programme (October 1998-November 1999)	Prototype phases 1 and 2 (July 1997-October 1998)
Initial invitation letters issued	443,710	50,612
Initial interviews booked	[1]134,948	30,826
Initial interviews attended	112,570	23,300
Number agreeing to participate	100,500	20,191
Number entering education/training	10,630	2,476
Jobs obtained (Number of these obtained by part-time workers increasing their hours)	32,710 (1,230)	5,429 (842)

[1] This figure is taken from internal management information and so has not been validated in the same way as other figures for the National Programme.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent on the New Deal for Lone Parents (a) since the original pilot schemes were established and (b) since its full implementation. [108000]

Angela Eagle: The cost of implementing the New Deal for Lone Parents (NDLP) prototype phase 1 areas was £7.9 million. The cost of implementing the national programme has been £47.6 million, broken down as £0.311 million 1997–98, £22.3 million in 1998–99 and £25 million in 1999–2000 (up to the end of December 1999).

Both sums include the cost of project management, the development and provision of IT support, publicity, the cost of evaluation and the costs of NDLP Innovative Pilots.

As such it is not possible to equate these with the impact of adviser time spent in helping lone parents into work. The independent evaluation of the NDLP prototype phase is due to be published at the end of this month and will include a full cost/benefit analysis. Similarly, the national programme is being evaluated separately and will also include a cost/benefit analysis. This is due for publication in spring 2002.

Low Income and Bad Health

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he proposes to take to further investigate the link between low income and chronic bad health highlighted in DSS Research Report No. 95; and if he will make a statement. [108116]

Mr. Bayley: DSS Research Report 95 was a baseline report from the Earnings Top-up (ETU) evaluation. This provided results of the first surveys of low-paid workers, medium-term unemployed people and employers conducted in 1996, before the introduction of ETU. Forthcoming reports from the ETU evaluation will also include analysis of self-reported health and disability.

Much research commissioned by the Department gathers information on self-reported health and disability for low income groups. In addition to the ETU evaluation, the Programme of Research into Low Income Families (PRILIF) and the Survey of Families with Children gathers information on health for families with children. The Jobseeker's Allowance Evaluation has information on the relationship between unemployment-related benefit receipt and poor health. The ONE evaluation will collect information on self-reported health and disability among clients of working age, and the impact of this on their ability to work. The Department also commissions research on clients receiving disability benefits.

We know that low income and poor health are often linked, and that they can act together to exclude many people from the benefits of a prospering nation. We are determined to overcome these problems. That is why we set out our plans to improve health and reduce the health gap in the White Paper "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation" (Cm 4386) and the accompanying "Reducing Health Inequalities: An action report" in July 1999, as well as in our strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion, "Opportunity for all" (September 1999, Cm 4445).

Montserrat Evacuees (Relocation)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what special arrangements exist for people from Montserrat relocating in the United Kingdom; [108136]

(2) if he will make a statement on the application of the habitual residence test to evacuees from Montserrat. [108138]

Mr. Bayley: Special rules were introduced in 1996 to give people coming from Montserrat, after 1 November 1995 because of the volcanic crisis, immediate access to the main safety net benefits: income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Income Support, Housing Benefit, and Council Tax Benefit. These rules effectively exempt people coming from Montserrat from the habitual residence test.

While no special arrangements for access to the Social Fund were made by Montserrations, existing guidance and directions already made provision for community care grants to be considered for families who are experiencing exceptional pressures. However, in 1998 a bulletin was issued to all staff amplifying the circumstances in which grants could be considered: examples specifically included instances where a disaster has resulted in the evacuation to the United Kingdom.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the subsidies were in each of the past 10 years to (a) Worthing Borough Council, (b) Arun District Council and (c) all English local housing authorities combined for investigation and detection of housing benefit and council tax fraud; and if he will make a statement. [108186]

Angela Eagle: Local authorities are paid an administration subsidy that helps meet the general cost of administering the Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit schemes. Specific financial incentives for investigating and detecting fraud were first introduced in April 1993 in the form of the weekly benefits savings scheme. Details of payments made under that scheme are set out in table 1.

The criteria for making claims under this scheme were tightened in 1998 following concerns expressed by the National Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee that some councils had previously overclaimed. The scheme has been further amended from 1999–2000 onwards to provide additional incentives to local authorities who successfully prosecute fraudsters and who adopt the Verification Framework. I have also set out in table 2 the amounts of subsidy paid in respect of the Verification Framework, introduced in 1998–99, which puts checks in place to stop fraud getting into the benefit system.

Table 3 details the challenge fund scheme, which ran from 1996–97 to 1998–99, and encouraged councils to bid for funding for innovative anti-fraud initiatives.

State Second Pension

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will announce the outcome of the consultation on the structure of National Insurance Rebates for the State Second Pension. [109171]

Mr. Rooker: Following consultation we have decided that the structure of National Insurance Rebates for the State Second Pension will be as follows:

all rebates for contracting-out into a personal pension, including a personal pension based stakeholder pension, will be calculated to reflect the enhanced three part accrual rate in the State Second Pension;

rebates will continue to be calculated as they are now for all occupational pension schemes, which will not be required to change their benefits; employees in all contracted-out pension arrangements on low pay (up to £9,500) will get a top-up from the State Second Pension; and the top-up should be extended to employees on moderate earnings (up to £21,600) in contracted-out occupational pension schemes.

These arrangements achieve the Government's objective of providing extra help for low and moderate earners in private pension schemes. They do so without causing any disruption to employers who provide occupational pension schemes. And the enhanced rebate will give a direct boost to saving in personal stakeholder schemes.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mrs. Anderson (NI Number KP 84 76 11 B) will receive her winter fuel payment for 1999–2000. [108636]

Mr. Bayley: I have written privately to Mrs. Anderson and the matter has now been resolved.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Investors in People

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Solicitor-General what is the total amount paid by the Treasury Solicitor to (a) Investors in People and (b) independent consultants in connection with the Treasury Solicitor's achievement of the Investors in People standard. [108040]

The Solicitor-General: No monies were paid to IiP UK, but £4,891.29 was paid to FOCUS Central London (Training and Enterprise Council) for the final assessment.

A total of £24,115.62 has been paid to independent consultants over the three and a half years that the Agency was working towards IiP. £7,535 of this was reimbursed by the Training and Enterprise Council during 1997 and 1998.

The major contribution to the achievement of IiP was the effort put in by the staff of the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

Paddington Disaster Inquiry

Mr. Salter: To ask the Solicitor-General (1) if evidence presented to Lord Cullen's Inquiry into the Paddington disaster will be submissible as evidence in any subsequent criminal prosecution; [108127]

(2) if persons presenting evidence to Lord Cullen's Inquiry into the Paddington disaster will be immune from any subsequent criminal prosecution. [108126]

The Solicitor-General: No person has been given immunity from prosecution in connection with the Paddington disaster. Witnesses to the inquiry have been given an undertaking authorised by the Attorney General, to the effect that evidence, written statements and documents produced by them to the inquiry will not be used in evidence against them in any criminal proceedings, except in limited circumstances. This will not, however, prevent a prosecution based on material other than that provided to the Inquiry. The undertaking was provided because it was certain that without it potential witnesses would be inhibited from providing Lord Cullen with full assistance. It was important that everything reasonably possible was done to enable the inquiry to begin its work immediately and to ensure that it would be fully effective, so that it can establish and publish the truth about the circumstances which led to the tragic rail crash.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rural Development

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement to the House of 7 December 1999, Official Report, columns 701–02, whether his plans for expenditure under the EU rural development regulation are subject to the outcome of the current consultation by the Scottish Executive on modulation. [107803]

Mr. Morley: The full England Rural Development Plan, which was submitted to the European Commission on 1 February, describes in detail the expenditure proposals outlined by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 7 December 1999, Official Report, columns 701–02. It includes an explanation of the proposed sources of funding including receipts from modulation and Government match-funding for those receipts. Key sections of the plan are available on the MAFF website and, once printed, a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

BSE

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the registered markets for the collection of over-30-month scheme cattle in East Anglia. [107753]

Ms Quin: Within East Anglia there are two markets at Norwich and Colchester registered with the Intervention Board for the live collection of over-30-month scheme cattle. The number of markets, and indeed abattoirs, in the region reflects the traditional patterns of marketing cull cows from the area and the predominantly arable nature of farming within the region.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 9W, on BSE, in determining whether a company has a satisfactory and long-standing contractual relationship under the OTMS, what examination is made of the annual published accounts of the company concerned. [107757]

Ms Quin: The Intervention Board closely monitors the performance of the abattoirs with whom it contracts to provide over-30-month scheme services. This includes daily supervision of operations and verification checks of the companies' performance on the specified scheme work including their duties as a payment centre. I can confirm that, where the Board already had an established and satisfactory working relationship with an abattoir, no reference was made to those companies' published accounts in evaluating their tenders. For new suppliers, or in any case of doubt, it is the Board's policy to seek information on the financial standing of a company before entering into a contract.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1999, Official Report, column 349W, on departmental research contracts, if he will place a copy of the standard research contract in use by his Department in the Library. [107100]

Ms Quin [holding answer 1 February 2000]: A copy of the Department's current standard research contract has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to the departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for his Department for 1999–2000. [108812]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) will be increased by £17,576,000 from £1,225,308,000 to £1,242,884,000. The increase is the net effect of:

(i) an Intervention Board running cost and capital End-Year Flexibility take-up of £747,000 and £157,000 respectively,

(ii) a transfer of £93,000 to the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR),

(iii) a transfer of £46,000 from the Scottish Executive Rural Affairs Department (SERAD),

(iv) a transfer of £8,000 from the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland (DANI),

(v) a transfer of £138,000 from the Department of Health (DoH).

(vi) a transfer of £107,000 the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR),

(vii) transfers of £1,491,000 from DoH, £497,000 from SERAD, £260,000 from the National Assembly for Wales Agriculture Department (NAWAD and, £249,000 from DANI, for the cost of the BSE Inquiry,

(viii) an increase of £5,500,000 in capital for the Rural Development scheme,

(ix) an increase of £6,500,000 in running costs to cover a shortfall in the income of the Meat Hygiene Service,

(x) an increase of £2,790,000 as the DEL element of additional funds for the Organic Aid scheme,

(xi) an increase of £79,000 provision and £134,000 receipts under the Phare Twinning scheme,

(xii) increase in provision and receipts of £15,162,000 in additional VAT recoveries,

(xiv) increase in provision of £1,103,000 and £1,869,000 in receipts under the Wider Markets initiative.

Also the Voted element of the DEL will be increased by £3,691,000 to reflect a matching reduction in the non-Voted element. And the Gross Running Costs limit for the Intervention Board will be increased by £747,000, and for MAFF by £6,720,000.

The increase will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Farming (Berkshire)

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farms there were in Berkshire in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [108421]

Ms Quin: The data are not available in the precise form requested but, from the June Agricultural Census, the number of holdings in Berkshire with one or more dairy cows was as follows:

Year	Number
1996	85
1997	78
1998	80
1999	73

Potato Industry

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates of those meetings he has had with representatives of the United Kingdom potato industry since he became Minister, indicating which individuals and groups he met. [107240]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 27 January 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State has responsibility for the potato industry. She met the Director General of the UK Potato Processors' Association on 13 January. Representative organisations and individual members of the potato industry are in frequent contact with officials and have a good working relationship with the Department.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to promote the UK potato industry abroad. [107241]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The Department sponsors the British Potato Council (BPC) and works closely with it and producers to promote exports via trade fairs and other events both here and abroad. One of the core functions of the BPC is to promote the British potato industry abroad as exports offer a significant opportunity for market growth. Details of the BPC's activities and achievements since it came into being in July 1997 are set out in the Council's annual report.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of (a) domestic production, (b) imports and (c) exports of (1) Adora, (2) Ailsa, (3) Ambo, (4) Anna, (5) Arran Banner, (6) Arran Comet, (7) Arran Pilot, (8) Atlantic, (9) Ausonia, (10) Avalanche, (11) Avondale, (12) Balmoral, (13) Barna, (14) Bimonda, (15) Bintje, (16) Brodick, (17) Brodie, (18) Buchan, (19) Cara, (20) Carlingford, (21) Charlotte, (22) Cultra, (23) Desiree, (24) Duke of York, (25) Epicure, (26) Erntestolz, (27) Estima, (28) Fianna, (29) Foremost, (30) Golden Wonder, (31) Hermes, (32) Home Guard, (33) Kennebec, (34) Kerr's Pink, (35) Kestrel, (36) King Edward, (37) Kingston, (38) Lady Rosetta, (39) Majestic, (40) Marfona, (41) Mariana, (42) Maris Bard, (43) Maris Peer, (44) Maris Piper, (45) Mondial, (46) Morene, (47) Nadine, (48) Navan, (49) Nicola, (50) Nieta, (51) Panda, (52) Penta, (53) Pentland Crown, (54) Pentland Dell, (55) Pentland Hawk, (56) Pentland Javelin, (57) Pentland Squire, (58) Premiere, (59) Record, (60) Red Cara, (61) Red Pontiac, (62) Remarka, (63) Robinta, (64) Rocket, (65) Romano, (66) Rooster, (67) Sante, (68) Saturna, (69) Saxon, (70) Shepody, (71) Sierra, (72) Slaney, (73) Spunta, (74) Stroma, (75) Ulster Sceptre, (76) Valor, (77) Wilja, (78) Winston and (79) Yukon Gold potato varieties. [107242]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 27 January 2000]: The latest potato statistics available for the United Kingdom are provisional figures for 1999 when the level of (a) domestic production was 7,100,000 tonnes; (b) imports (excluding processed and seed) were 256,000 tonnes and (c) exports (excluding processed and seed) were 175,000 tonnes. Statistics are not collected to the level of detail requested but the British Potato Council's publication "Potato Statistics in Great Britain 1993–97" gives planting figures for some of the varieties mentioned by the hon. Member.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which representatives from his Ministry will attend the European Potato Industry Conference in Rome on 27 to 28 January. [107243]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 27 January 2000]: There will be no representatives from my Ministry at the forthcoming European Potato Industry Conference.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had and with which bodies about the climate change levy. [107235]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 27 January 2000]: Since my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in last year's Budget that the Government intend to introduce a climate change levy, I have met with a large number of bodies and individual companies representing the food, drink and agricultural industries. The climate change levy was raised at several of these meetings. Most of these organisations have also put their concerns to Ministers at the Treasury and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) to ensure that the interests of the food, drink and agricultural industries can be taken fully into account during the detailed design of the levy.

Correspondence

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed dated 9 November, relating to a constituent from North Bellshill, Belford, concerning area aid for farmers. [107289]

Mr. Nick Brown: A reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed was sent on 27 January 2000.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will reply to a letter from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, dated 27 September 1999, relating to the qualifications of veterinary surgeons. [107287]

Mr. Nick Brown: A reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed was sent on 27 January 2000.

Pig Farmers

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission for compensation for the public health related costs imposed on pig farmers following the BSE crisis. [107234]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 27 January 2000]: I and my officials have had a number of discussions with the European Commission on the current difficulties being faced by UK pig producers. My most recent discussions were with Agriculture Commissioner Fischler in the margins of the Agriculture Council on Monday 24 January and then on Tuesday 1 February in London.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rural Transport Policy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many officials within his Department are directly employed in developing rural transport policy; and what proportion this figure represents of the total number of people employed by his Department. [105280]

Mr. Hill: A large number of officials throughout my Department and the Government offices are responsible for rural transport policy as part of the developing integrated transport strategy and rural White Paper process. In addition, the Countryside Agency administers some transport grants on our behalf, offers advice and is involved in working with the Department on rural transport pilots.

"The Urban Renaissance"

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in London on the proposals of the Urban Task Force's report "The Urban Renaissance". [107354]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There are more than a hundred wide-ranging and forward-thinking recommendations in the Urban Task Force report. The Government have welcomed the report as an important contribution to the urban renaissance debate and are considering its recommendations in detail in drawing up the White Paper on urban policy, due to be published later this year. The Mayor may also wish to consider the report when producing the Spatial Development and other strategies set out in the GLA Act 1999 and generally, as the London boroughs are already doing.

In the meantime, it is important to keep up the momentum and many of the report's recommendations are already being taken forward. We have already set up nine pilot home zones, including two in London, at Five Roads in Ealing and in the Holmewood area of Lambeth. In addition, pilot urban regeneration companies have been published, although as yet there are none in London.

Issues relating to the management of land supply are being covered in revisions to Planning Policy Guidance notes 3, 11 and 12 that apply throughout the country. The recommendations for streamlining of the Compulsory Purchase Order process are to be covered in the review which is currently taking place, while similar work on planning obligations is also under way. These will all be of direct significance to the capital.

In London, the new Mayor and Assembly are charged with preparing a spatial planning framework (the Spatial Development Strategy) that is consistent with other Mayoral strategies for transport, economic regeneration and the environment. This provides an opportunity to provide a more effective and integrated strategic framework for delivering urban renaissance in the capital.

Draft guidance has recently been issued on Strategic Planning in London which stresses the importance the Secretary of State attaches to the SDS promoting urban renaissance through good urban design and improvement of the public realm. New arrangements for consultation on strategic applications will mean that the Mayor can ensure SDS principles are delivered on the ground.

The Government have just published a report, jointly with the London Planning Advisory Committee (LPAC), on how to achieve more sustainable patterns of residential quality by using a design-led approach ("Sustainable Residential Quality: Exploring the Housing potential of Large Sites: LPAC January 2000"). Copies of this report have been forwarded to every London borough.

In addition to the responsibility for drawing up the Transport Strategy for the capital to which the boroughs will have regard in producing their Local Transport Plans, the Mayor has also been given the powers to introduce road user (congestion) charging and workplace parking levies and to use the revenue generated in support of the Transport Strategy. With the agreement of the Mayor, the London boroughs may also introduce such measures.

Rail Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the cost benefit analysis of (a) ATP and (b) other alternative systems of train protection presently available. [107860]

Mr. Hill: The cost benefit analysis of Automatic Train Protection (ATP) will depend on a number of factors including the precise system chosen, the timing of its introduction, and the level of safety risk which it addresses. A British rail report on ATP including estimates of costs and benefits was placed in the Library of the House in July 1994, but those estimates would need to be recalculated in the light of specific proposals.

A regulatory impact assessment for the Railway Safety Regulations 1999, including a cost benefit assessment of the Train Protection and Warning System (TPWS), was placed in the Library of each House when the Regulations were laid on 10 August 1999. Following the tragic accident at Ladbroke Grove, we asked Sir David Davies to make an assessment of train protection systems and we expect his report shortly. We will also look to the Health and Safety Commission for advice before any further decisions on train protection are taken.

Rail Passengers (Delays)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much compensation was paid to rail passengers for delays under passenger charters in each of the last five years. [108440]

Mr. Hill: Passenger's Charter payment records are maintained separately by each of the 25 franchised passenger train operators. This information is not held centrally.

HEALTH

Hip Replacement Revisions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many revision total hip replacement operations in the National Health Service were performed in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) from January to June 1999 expressed as a percentage of total hip operations. [101206]

Mr. Denham: The information for England is set out in the table. This is routinely presented in financial years rather than calendar years.

Year	Revision operations as a percentage of all hip replacements
1999–2000 Q1	[1]9.4
1998–99 Q3	[1]9.6
1998–99 Q2	[1]10.1
1998–99 Q1	[1]10.5
1997–98	[1]9.8
1996–97	9.8
1995–96	9.4

[1] Data for 1999–2000, 1998–99 and 1997–98 are provisional. No adjustments have been made for coverage and the figures are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Notes:

1. Data for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are grossed for coverage (but not for unknown/invalid clinical data). Information for Quarter 4 of 1998–99 is not yet available.
2. OPCS4R codes W37-W39, W46-W48, excluding emergency admissions and episodes with a primary diagnosis of ICD 10 codes S72.0, S72.1 and S72.2.

Heart Transplants

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on heart transplants for patients over 60 years. [103957]

Mr. Denham: There is no specific policy on heart transplants for patients over 60. Every patient should be assessed according to his or her individual needs, and there should be no bar to transplantation other than a clear medical contraindication.

Nursing Vacancies

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities which have nursing vacancies in excess of 300. [107065]

Mr. Denham: The available information is given in the table.

Vacancies (nursing and midwifery staff) in health authorities with over 300 posts vacant at 31 March 1999

Whole-time equivalents

Health Authority	Total vacancies [1]	Percentage [2]	3 month vacancies [3]	Percentage [2]
Camden and Islington	780	11.1	390	5.5
North Essex	330	5.2	—	—
East London and City	700	12.9	500	9.1
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	560	8.3	—	—
Birmingham	590	5.3	330	3.0
Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth	560	9.7	—	—

Thyroid Disorder

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods are used by health authorities to test for thyroid disorder; and what plans he has to prescribe a standard test. [107488]

Mr. Denham: There are a number of thyroid disorders and diseases. The results of initial testing may indicate further tests are needed to diagnose the patient's condition.

The initial thyroid function tests have improved greatly in recent years as a result of medical research, and up-to-date tests are available in National Health Service laboratories. The most common are the measurement of serum thyroid stimulating hormone, and free thyroxine (T4). Others commonly used include isotope uptake studies, thyroid antibody assays, ultrasound scans and needle biopsies. All NHS laboratories participate in quality assurance schemes.

The Department has no plans to issue guidance in this area.

Rural Ambulance Services

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase resources to rural ambulance services in (a) Cumbria and (b) elsewhere. [107486]

Ms Stuart: Since 1997, an extra £15 million has been included in the general allocation to health authorities to support implementation of the new ambulance service targets across England; those allocations are weighted to take account of rurality. Furthermore, we have carried out research recently to support ambulance services in delivering the national targets in both urban and rural areas such as Cumbria.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the (a) effectiveness and (b) response times for ambulance services in sparsely populated rural counties. [107490]

Ms Stuart: We recognise the practical constraints on ambulance services that have to cope with extremes of geography. In emergency situations the effectiveness of ambulance services is largely dependent on speed of response and the clinical training of their crews. The new response time targets will benefit rural areas as they are based on clinical need rather than geography. However rural services will need to develop alternative approaches to achieving the response times for people with immediately life-threatening conditions including paramedics using fast response vehicles, co-responder programmes (using the fire service and police) and community first responder schemes (local trained volunteers). We have commissioned research on the cost effectiveness of these alternative responses to help local health economies, including those in rural areas, plan specific service improvements.

Radiological Facilities

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute hospitals in the NHS do not have full radiological facilities, including scanning equipment, on site. [107415]

Ms Stuart: Information on radiological facilities, including scanning equipment, on individual acute hospital sites is not collected centrally. However, information on the number of imaging and radiodiagnostic examinations or tests undertaken in National Health Service trusts is available and is published annually in "Imaging and radiodiagnostics, England". The latest data are for 1998–99 and have been placed in the Library.

Neurology Treatment

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 100W, on waiting times, for how many weeks in excess of 26 weeks each of the 36 patients referred to are waiting to see the neurology consultant. [108093]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected.

Drug Rehabilitation

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug detoxification and rehabilitation centres there are in each English county; and if he will make a statement. [107795]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 February 2000]: The information requested is not available centrally. However, agencies offering a range of specialist services for drug misusers are listed in the directory "Drug Problems: where to get help", published in 1998 by the Standing Conference On Drug Abuse (SCODA). I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

Nurse Training

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many single parents are in training to become nurses. [107647]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 3 February 2000]: The information requested is not held centrally. Of the 23,410 students currently paid a National Health Service Bursary by the NHS Student Grants Unit (SGU), 1,006 (4.3 per cent.) are in receipt of the single parent addition. Older students (those aged 26 years and over), who are also single parents, may opt to receive the older students' allowance rather than the single parent addition, as this may be more favourable.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students are currently completing an access to nursing course; and how many of those students are single parents. [107648]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 3 February 2000]: The number of students undertaking an access to nursing course in 1997–98 was 1,038.

No information is held on whether students are single parents.

Obesity

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the levels of obesity in England. [107966]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 February 2000]: We have made heart disease, stroke and cancer key areas of action in our health strategy, "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation". The White Paper indicates the significance of physical activity, nutrition and healthy weight management in reducing the risks of heart disease and stroke and some cancers.

Obesity results from an excess of energy intake over energy expenditure. Therefore, we have spent over £700,000 on healthy eating campaigns aimed at the general population in this financial year. We have also spent £9 million over the last three years on "Active for Life" to promote the health benefits of physically active lifestyles. Furthermore, in 1999 we funded the BBC's campaign "Fighting Fat, Fighting Fit" and financed the Faculty of Public Health Medicine's guidance "Tackling Obesity" aimed at primary care health promotion practitioners. The role of obesity in the development of heart disease will also be addressed in the forthcoming National Service Framework on coronary heart disease.

We are now considering further options for improving dietary habits, including increasing the consumption of fruit and vegetables.

Correspondence

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter of 23 September 1999 from the right hon. Member for North-East Hampshire regarding a constituent, Mrs. Horton. [108229]

Yvette Cooper: I replied to the right hon. Member on 31 January.

Dentistry

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 107W, on dentistry, what is the latest date by which he expects to publish the NHS dental strategy. [108639]

Mr. Hutton: The Government's strategy for modernising National Health Service dentistry in England will be published when it is complete and fully reflects all our proposals. We expect this to be soon.

Beta-interferon

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those trusts and primary care groups which do not routinely pay for patients suffering from multiple sclerosis to receive Beta-interferon when that is the drug recommended by the patients' physicians. [108449]

Ms Stuart: Information about local policies on the treatment of multiple sclerosis is not available centrally. Any such policies should be agreed by the health authorities, primary care groups, trusts and clinicians concerned, and should provide for individual cases to be considered on their merits in the light of the evidence available on different forms of treatment.

We have asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to conduct an authoritative appraisal of the evidence on Beta-interferon, as part of its first work programme. NICE guidance is expected to be issued to the National Health Service by August 2000.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1999, Official Report, column 398W, on departmental research contracts, if he will place a copy of the standard research contract in use by his Department in the Library. [107102]

Jane Kennedy [holding answer 1 February 2000]: The standard form of contract currently used, by the Lord Chancellor's Department, for the commissioning of research has been placed in the Library. It should be noted that while all the Department's research contracts are based upon this format each individual contract is tailored to suit the research being commissioned.

TREASURY

Debt Relief (Sudan)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taken to link debt relief and the resolution of conflict in Sudan. [108135]

Mr. Timms: To qualify for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, countries must face an unsustainable debt burden beyond traditional debt-relief mechanisms and must establish a track record of reform and sound policies through IMF- and World Bank-supported programmes.

Last year the IMF Board, with UK supporting, agreed to lift the declaration of non-cooperation with Sudan: the first step in the process for the country to get back on track in its relations with the International Financial Institutions. The IMF though stressed that economic development was not possible without peace and urged the authorities to work towards finding a solution. A further review of the country's record under the IMF Staff Managed Programme will take place later this year.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with G7 countries on Sudan's debt problem. [108147]

Mr. Timms: To qualify for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, countries must face an unsustainable debt burden beyond traditional debt-relief mechanisms and must establish a track record of reform and sound policies through IMF and World Bank-supported programmes.

Last year the IMF Board agreed, with UK supporting, to lift the declaration of non-cooperation with Sudan: the first step in the process for the country to get back on track in its relations with the IMF. The next stage in the process will be a further review later this year when the country's record will be assessed with a view to terminating the suspension of Sudan's voting rights.

Gold Reserves

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the price at which the Bank of England sold gold from the reserves in the past 12 months, (b) the total amount of these sales proceeds which was invested in the purchase of euros and (c) the price at which the euros were purchased. [108293]

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the sterling value was of each of the sales of gold from the reserves at the time of sale in the last 12 months; and if he will list (a) the amount of euros purchased with the resulting funds and (b) the dates of purchase. [108446]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Members to the answers I gave the hon. Members for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) and for Louth and Horncastle (Sir P. Tapsell) on 13 December 1999, Official Report, column 76W.

Haulage Industry

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will commission research on the impact of the provisions of the 1999 Budget on the haulage industry; [108452]

(2) what representations he has received from representatives of the haulage industry (a) nationally and (b) in the North-East region, regarding his forthcoming Budget; [108454]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes in vehicle excise duty introduced in his 1999 Budget on the haulage industry; [108456]

(4) what assessment he has made of the impact of the recent changes in the price of diesel fuel on the haulage industry. [108457]

Mr. Timms: Since the last Budget, the Government have been working closely with representatives of the haulage industry and unions through the Road Haulage Forum to assess the competitiveness of the UK haulage industry. The forum has conducted research in a wide range of areas, and will continue to monitor the many factors affecting the competitive position of UK hauliers, including their spending costs and total tax burden. I have attended two meetings of the Forum since July and met members of it on other occasions.

In addition to our discussions in the Road Haulage Forum, we have received a number of representations from the haulage industry and other interested parties across the UK. These will all be given careful consideration in the context of the Chancellor's Budget judgment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many questions to his Department tabled for ordinary written answer during Session 1998–99 were answered (a) within two weeks of tabling, (b) within one month of tabling, (c) within three months of tabling and (d) after three months of tabling. [106492]

Mr. Byers: The information is as follows:

Answered	Number
Within 2 weeks	1,302
Within 1 month	53
Within 3 months	1
After 3 months	0
Total	1,356

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many questions to his Department were tabled for written answer during session 1998–99; and how many of these he replied to (a) by means of a letter placed in the Library rather than by substantive answer in the Official Report, (b) by stating that a substantive answer could not be given due to information not being held centrally and (c) by stating that a substantive answer could not be given due to disproportionate cost. [106487]

Mr. Byers: The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many questions to his Department tabled for written answer on a named day during Session 1998–99 were answered (a) on or before a named day, (b) within one week of a named day, (c) within one month of a named day, (d) within three months of a named day and (e) after three months of a named day. [106481]

Mr. Byers: The information is as follows:

Answered	Number
On day	409
Within 1 week	483
Within 1 month	122
Within 3 months	9
After 3 months	0
Total	1,023

Credit Ratings

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the credit rating of companies seeking to tender for services provided by his Department is checked before the contract is awarded. [107745]

Dr. Howells: Procedure in DTI, as recommended in the Department's Procurement Manual and based on HM Treasury procurement guidance, is that financial appraisal of potential suppliers is undertaken where (a) contracts have a value of up to £10,000 and are critical, novel or contentious; (b) contracts have a value of £10,000 or more. Qualified accountants are required to report on a company's published accounts where contract values exceed £95,000.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how often the credit rating of companies supplying services to his Department is checked. [107750]

Dr. Howells: Procedure in DTI, as recommended in the Department's Procurement Manual and based on HM Treasury procurement guidance, is that financial appraisal of suppliers is undertaken pre-award where contract values are £10,000 or more, or are otherwise critical, novel or contentious. Where contract duration is more than one year, checks on financial viability may be undertaken at regular intervals.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact the climate change levy will have on the profitability and competitiveness of the wood particleboard and wood fibreboard industry. [107939]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's goal remains to design and implement the levy in a way which safeguards competitiveness while maximising its environmental benefits. The wood particleboard and fibreboard industry, together with other sectors, will benefit from the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his 9 November 1999 Pre-Budget Report, including: the lower overall rates of the levy; the exemptions for electricity generated from new forms of renewable energy and good quality combined heat and power plants; and the trebling of support for energy efficiency measures under the levy package.

In addition, those wood particleboard and fibreboard industry sites that are covered by the Integrated Pollution Prevention Control Directive, as defined by reference to Part A of the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulation, will be eligible for an 80 per cent. discount from the levy if they sign up to a negotiated agreement to improve energy efficiency or deliver emissions reductions that meet the Government's criteria.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1999, Official Report, column 572W, what restrictions were placed on contractors carrying out research projects funded by his Department in 1999 in respect of them discussing their findings with journalists (a) before and (b) after publication. [108190]

Ms Hewitt: The Department's standard terms and conditions of contract for services, placed in the Library of the House as indicated in my answer of 2 February 2000, Official Report, column 604W, require a contractor to obtain consent in writing prior to communicating information obtained in the course of work performed under the contract. Where this contract term applies, it would cover discussion of findings with journalists both before and after publication. Where this Department funds research projects as grants rather than service contracts, a similar clause would be applied but only for the purpose of protecting confidential information. In such a case the written consent of the Department and all parties to the project would be required before release. In any event, as I indicated in my earlier answer, the Department actively encourages the publication of results from the research it has funded.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what restrictions have been placed on contractors carrying out research contracts funded by grants from the Research Councils during 1999 in respect of them discussing their findings with journalists (a) before and (b) after publication; and if he will place a copy of the standard research contract for each Research Council in the Library. [108188]

Ms Hewitt: Each Research Council has its own terms and conditions that cover the actions of people and institutions in receipt of Research Council funds. None of them includes restrictions on discussing research findings with journalists either before or after publication. One of them, the Biotechnology and Biosciences Research Council (BBSRC), does request that grantholders notify them in advance of any media releases that refer to BBSRC funded research, so that they can, themselves, respond efficiently to any subsequent media inquiries. All Research Councils actively encourage grantholders to publish their research. They also advise them on the need to protect Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) and not to jeopardise its future exploitation. However, the management of IPR generated by grantholders, and any resulting restrictions on discussions with journalists, are a matter for the institution in which the research is conducted and not the Research Councils. Copies of each Research Council's research grant terms and conditions will be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

Metric Measurement Conversion

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance his Department makes available to small businesses to convert equipment from imperial to metric measurement; and if he will make a statement. [108625]

Dr. Howells: None.

Metrication has been under way in stages since 1965, with long lead-in times at each stage. In accordance with normal practice the Government do not generally provide financial assistance to business to meet the cost of legislative changes. These are taken into account by way of the Regulatory Impact Assessments when policy and lead-in times are formulated.

Export Licence Applications

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much official time was spent considering export licence application 6078 between the date of its submission and the date of its refusal. [108476]

Dr. Howells: The time spent on each export licence application varies according to a number of factors on which the assessment of the application is based. No record is kept within the Export Control Organisation of the amount of time afforded to each individual application. Export licence application 6078 was received on 21 September 1999 and refused on 24 January 2000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average length of time during the past 12 months between submission of applications for licences to export goods to Iran and decisions on those applications. [108478]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 404W.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the annual growth or decline of the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry in each of the last 10 years. [108691]

Dr. Howells: The information for the last 10 years is available in the following table:

Manufacture of textiles and textile products

Year	Index of production 1995 = 100	Year-on-year percentage change
1989	112.9	–2.8
1990	111.8	–1.0
1991	101.0	0.9
1993	101.3	–0.6
1994	103.6	2.3

Manufacture of textiles and textile products

Year	Index of production 1995 = 100	Year-on-year percentage change
1995	100.0	–3.5
1996	99.6	–0.4
1997	96.4	–3.2
1998	89.1	–7.6

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps his Department has taken to ensure that the public sector supports the United Kingdom clothing and textile industry and to make such support easily accessible; [108658]

(2) what assistance his Department gives to aid the development of the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry. [108663]

Mr. Alan Johnson: DTI provides a wide range of support to the UK's textile and clothing industry. The Department's Textile, Clothing and Footwear Unit is currently funding about 25 individual projects addressing aspects of the industry's competitiveness covering areas such as supply chain development, education and training, technical innovation, design and marketing.

Other public bodies provide support for the industry in areas such as assistance for capital investment, vocational training, export promotion and research and development.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of Government policies on the long-term performance and profitability of the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry since May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [108662]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government's first priority on coming to office was to secure long-term economic stability and put an end to the damaging cycle of boom and bust. The Government understand the concerns of businesses, including the textile and clothing sectors trading with Europe, about the pound. But short-term fixes would be the biggest threat of all to industry, creating the illusion of temporary relief followed by the reality of long-term damage.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the output was of the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry as a proportion of gross domestic product during 1998–99. [108657]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Value added of the UK textile and clothing industry represented 0.9 per cent. of Gross Domestic Product in 1998, the latest whole year for which data are available.

Cash Machines (Surcharges)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what changes to the Link network charging structure require approval by the Office of Fair Trading; [108445]

(2) if he will use his powers under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 to prevent banks introducing surcharges for cash machine withdrawals. [108444]

Dr. Howells: I understand that the current LINK agreement is not registerable under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976.

From 1 March, any changes to the current LINK agreement will fall to be considered by the Director General of Fair Trading under the prohibitions of the Competition Act 1998.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the members of the Link network regarding the possible introduction of surcharges for cash machine withdrawals. [108443]

Dr. Howells: My Department has received representations on this subject from Barclays Bank, the Co-operative Bank, and the Nationwide Building Society.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery Commission

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to alter the directions he has made to the National Lottery Commission under section 11 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, as amended. [109170]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have removed the limit on the number of rollovers for any game forming part of the National Lottery from the National Lottery Commission's current directions. The Commission has a statutory duty to protect the interests of players, and has been directed not to license any game that encourages excessive participation—this direction remains in force. The Commission will determine on a game-by-game basis whether there should be limits on the maximum number of rollovers—and, if so, what the limits should be—in the light of these duties.

I have placed copies of the revised directions in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has had with the New Millennium Experience Company about ticket sales for the Millennium Dome for the first three months of 2000. [104896]

Janet Anderson: The Shareholder (The Lord Falconer of Thoroton), on behalf of the Government, of the New Millennium Experience Company has regular discussions with NMEC's Chairman and Chief Executive on all matters concerning the Millennium Experience at the Dome, including ticket sales. Lord Falconer is supported in his role as shareholder by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport Millennium Unit, who have also been involved in these discussions. I understand it is NMEC's intention to release details of ticket sales for the first month of 2000 very soon.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the criteria which determine how bonuses for executives of the Millennium Dome are calculated, indicating the extent to which such bonuses vary according to the performance of those individuals from 31 December 1999 onwards; [104531]

(2) if the operation of the opening ceremony of the Dome will be a material factor in determining whether the Chief Executive and Managing Director of the Millennium Dome qualify for maximum bonus payments. [104524]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 13 January 2000]: The remuneration policy for the executive directors of NMEC's Board, including the Chief Executive and the Managing Director, are set out in the company's published Annual Reports and Accounts, as are their actual remuneration details for the year to which each set of Accounts refers. Performance bonuses are payable at the end of the individual's contract. No entitlement to the payment of the bonus accrues during the course of the contract. The quantum of any such bonus paid are matters for the Board of NMEC. The Board will take account of all aspects of the performance of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 21 December 1999, Official Report, column 557W, what is the total number of free tickets provided to Dome sponsors. [104602]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 13 January 2000]: There are no free tickets to sponsors. Tickets available to sponsors are part of the sponsorship contractual terms and are an integral part of the benefits sponsors receive in recognition of their financial support for the project. These arrangements are standard for sponsorships of major events. The number of tickets available to sponsors under these arrangements vary according to the level of contribution made by each sponsor. Since they are part and parcel of the sponsorship contract, details are commercially confidential under the confidentiality clauses applicable to both parties. Tickets available to sponsors under the terms of their contractual arrangements do not count towards NMEC's ticket sales and reservations numbers which stand at over one million to date.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy in respect of (a) the insertion of and (b) the activation of penalty clauses into contracts relating to (i) the construction and (ii) the operation of the Millennium Dome; if contracts have been issued without penalty clauses being so inserted; how many penalty clauses have been activated; how much has been levied in penalties under such clauses; and if he will make a statement. [104530]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 13 January 2000]: All contractual arrangements for the construction and operation of the Dome are the responsibility of the New Millennium Experience Company. As regards construction contracts, NMEC has followed best industry practice throughout and in all cases has included performance, breach of contract and termination provisions. In order to ensure achievement of immovable target dates, NMEC has worked with its contractors to create an environment which has ensured that all key targets were met. As a result none of the construction contracts have been terminated on breach of contract grounds and all issues of performance were resolved through constructive negotiation in a spirit of teamwork. The operation of the Dome is an in-house responsibility and NMEC directly employs the host staff. Contracts with suppliers of goods and services including security, waste management and catering all follow industry best practice and include performance, breach of contract and termination provisions.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to increase visitor numbers at the Dome. [104436]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 13 January 2000]: The New Millennium Experience Company is responsible for all aspects of the Dome's operation including visitor numbers. The Government are confident that NMEC will increase visitor numbers as the year moves on. The winter months are always the most difficult for those visitor attractions which remain open through the year and the first months of operation at the Dome were always going to be a challenge both in respect of the industry's normal trends and because inevitable teething problems would need to be addressed.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the contracts between NMEC and the sponsors of the Dome. [104431]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 13 January 2000]: The contracts between NMEC and sponsors of the Millennium Experience are subject to confidentiality clauses applicable to both parties. This is normal practice in commercial operations. The Government have, however, placed in the House Libraries on 17 December 1998, NMEC's "Outline Approach to Official Sponsors of the Dome" and on 14 December 1999, NMEC's pamphlet "Sponsor Identity and Branding Related to Zones". NMEC must operate in a commercial way if it is to deliver its objectives for the Millennium Experience and if it is to compete successfully both in the visitor attraction market, and in the event sponsorship market. Its ability to do so will be compromised if every detail of all its operations and all its contractual terms with suppliers and sponsors are published. In order to meet its public accountability responsibilities, NMEC has made available, and will continue to make available when requested, commercially confidential information, to the Culture, Media and Sport Committee of the House. The Government are satisfied that the NMEC's approach in these matters is acceptable given the commercial nature of its operation.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many guests invited to the Dome for new year's eve did not receive their tickets before 31 December. [104433]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 13 January 2000]: Over 8,000 of the 10,000 or so guests at the Dome Opening Celebration received their tickets before 31 December. Of the 2,000 or so who did not, arrangements were made for them to pick up their tickets either at Charlton or Stratford rail stations depending on where they had been advised to go beforehand. Every effort was made to contact, before 31 December, those whose tickets could not be despatched in time. The Shareholder, the Lord Falconer of Thoroton, the NMEC Chief Executive and the Metropolitan police have apologised for the inconvenience caused to guests who experienced delays at Stratford in particular, although the process on the night of picking up tickets was not, of itself, a material cause of delays. The event itself, in terms of the numbers attending, the arrangements for the safety of all guests, and the programme of spectacular entertainment, presented NMEC, the police and the transport operators with unprecedented logistical and security requirements. There were clearly some problems with timely ticket issues for all guests and with arrangements at Stratford in particular—and all guests who came via that satellite have been offered a free visit to the Dome on a day of their choosing. Despite those problems, the majority of people who attended on the night had a thoroughly enjoyable evening entertained by some truly spectacular performances.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on bonus payments to the Chief Executive and the senior team of the New Millennium Experience Company. [105037]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 17 January 2000]: The remuneration policy for the executive directors of NMEC's Board, including the Chief Executive and the Managing Director, are set out in the company's published Annual Reports and Accounts, as are their actual remuneration details for the year to which each set of Accounts refers. Performance bonuses are payable at the end of the individual's contract. No entitlement to the payment of the bonus accrues during the course of the contract. The quantum of any such bonus paid are matters for the Board of NMEC. The Board will take account of all aspects of the performance of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future of the Chief Executive of the New Millennium Experience Company. [105038]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 17 January 2000]: Once the Chief Executive of NMEC has completed her contract with that company her future is entirely a matter for her. Since taking up her post at NMEC in January 1997 she has, with her team, delivered some remarkable achievements on a particularly complex and unique project.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will place in the Library (a) Sport England's and (b) his Department's minutes of the meetings held between Sport England, the Chairman of Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and the former Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks); [106632]

(2) if his Department has copies of all the minutes or reports taken by Sport England of the meetings involving the CEO of Sport England, the Chairman of Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and the former Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks); [106633]

(3) which officials from Sport England accompanied the CEO to meetings concerning the new Wembley Stadium, between the former Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks), and the Chairman of Wembley National Stadium Ltd.; [106634]

(4) how many meetings were held between the then Minister for Sport, the Chairman of Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and the CEO of Sport England between May 1997 and July 1999 to discuss the new Wembley Stadium. [106635]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 24 January 2000]: The former Minister for Sport, my hon. Friend the Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks), had a total of 12 meetings involving either the Chief Executive of Sport England or the Chairman of Wembley National Stadium Limited between May 1997 and July 1999. The dates and details of those attending are as listed. My Department does not hold copies of Sport England's notes, the publication of which is a matter for them to consider, but maintains its own internal notes of such meetings. In respect of my Department's minutes of these meetings, representatives of non-governmental organisations took part in those meetings on the understanding that discussions were in confidence, and I do not, therefore, consider it appropriate that they should be published.

Playing Fields

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funds are available from (a) sports foundations sponsored by his Department and (b) the National Lottery to support travel by schoolchildren to playing fields for the purpose of participating in team sports. [108131]

Kate Hoey: The travel costs to playing fields for schoolchildren is eligible for support under the National Lottery Awards for All programme provided the travel is undertaken outside of school hours and is part of an overall project for which funding is being sought. This programme provides lottery grants of up to £5,000 to support short-term revenue as well as capital schemes. To date, Sport England has made around 2,000 awards totalling £4.8 million under the Programme, although it is not possible to say how much of this relates specifically to travel costs.

The Sportsmatch scheme, which is funded by my Department through Sport England, encourages business sponsors to invest in grass roots sport by matching their investment pound for pound up to £50,000 for eligible projects. Since its introduction eight years ago more than £20 million of Sportsmatch funding has been awarded in 72 sports, the majority supporting youth development programmes. Many of these involve the provision of coaching to youngsters, with a proportion of the funding allocated to transportation from home or school to playing fields and other facilities, although no details are available of the specific sums spent on travel.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Saville Inquiry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 8W, on the Saville inquiry, how much of the sums expended after 31 October 1999 were spent under each of the principal sub-headings. [107401]

Mr. Ingram: The sums expended by the Saville Inquiry between 1 November 1999 and 31 December 1999 (the most recent date for which information is available) break down as follows under the main sub-headings:

	Total (£)
Salaries	187,893.71
Travel and Subsistence	24,731.22
Accommodation	264,551.82
Payments to barristers and solicitors	1,600,130.84
IT/Communication Costs	39,163.50
Miscellaneous, including general Office Expenditure	47,461.94
Total	2,163,933.03

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the hourly rate paid to (a) solicitors and (b) barristers acting for the families of those persons killed by the Army in Londonderry on 30 January 1972; by what procedures these sums were negotiated and agreed; when they were agreed; how often they are paid; under which estimates budget subheadings provision for these sums falls; and what were the total sums paid to (i) solicitors and (ii) barristers up to 31 December 1999. [107387]

Mr. Ingram: Interim arrangements for the payment of solicitors and barristers acting for the families of those killed on 30 January 1972 have applied since 29 October 1999. The interim rates are as follows—solicitors receive £114 per hour, unqualified personnel £57 per hour, Senior Counsel receive £200 per hour and Junior Counsel £100 per hour. The interim arrangements provide for senior counsel to be paid at the rate of £1,500 per day and Junior Counsel £750 per day. In addition they will be able to claim up to two hours preparatory work per day during the hearing. The Tribunal plans to submit these fees for determination to the Senior Costs Judge later this year, and again when the Tribunal's final report is submitted to the Secretary of State. These arrangements were agreed after consultation between the Inquiry and the Northern Ireland Office. Junior Counsel have challenged these interim arrangements on the grounds that they are entitled to receive two-thirds, not one half, of their senior's rate and are seeking leave to have the matter judicially reviewed.

Payment of these sums is covered by the 1999–2000 Main Supply Estimates and provision falls under the Northern Ireland Office Class XV, Vote 1 within Line K Bloody Sunday (Saville) Inquiry Subhead 2 Other Current Expenditure. Sums are paid monthly after receipt of an invoice. It is not possible to provide a figure for monies paid to solicitors and barristers separately, nor to give a figure for payments for their professional services, separately from their other expenses. The total amount paid out to cover both fees and other expenses up to 31 December 1999 is £7,698,820.

Barristers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what correspondence he has exchanged over the past three years with the Lord Chancellor concerning appointments to the Inner Bar of Northern Ireland; and if he will place correspondence in the Library. [107828]

Mr. Ingram: This question relates to a matter currently before the High Court in Northern Ireland. It would be inappropriate, therefore, to offer comment or to place correspondence in the Library as requested.

Decommissioning

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will place the full copy of the report of the International Body on Decommissioning in the Library. [108597]

Mr. Mandelson: In my Statement to the House on 3 February 2000, Official Report, columns 1311–12, I gave a full account of the report.

If a further report is presented, the two reports will be published together.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Staff Bonuses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the new year period; what were the (a) maximum and (b) minimum bonuses paid; how many people received the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum payments; and if he will make a statement. [104496]

Mr. Wills: The information requested is not held centrally or collected in the form requested. It could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Individual line managers are responsible for budgets and for processing/authorising overtime payments. Any overtime payments for the new year period will not be separately identifiable. In addition, any payments will not yet have been submitted/processed.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many questions to his Department were tabled for written answer during session 1998–99; and how many of these he replied to (a) by means of a letter placed in the Library rather than by substantive answer in the Official Report, (b) by stating that a substantive answer could not be given due to information not being held centrally and (c) by stating that a substantive answer could not be given due to disproportionate cost. [106486]

Mr. Wills: During the Parliamentary session 1998–99, 2,154 PQs were tabled to the Department for written answer.

We do not maintain statistical records breaking down the nature of replies given in the manner requested. This could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many questions to his Department tabled for ordinary written answer during Session 1998–99 were answered (a) within two weeks of tabling, (b) within one month of tabling, (c) within three months of tabling and (d) after three months of tabling. [106490]

Mr. Wills: We do not record this information in precisely the manner requested, but I am able to provide the following information:

During the Parliamentary session 1998–99, 1,189 PQs were tabled to the Department for ordinary written answer. Of these 1,141 PQs (96 per cent.) were answered within two weeks of tabling, 42 PQs (3 per cent.) were answered between two weeks and four weeks of tabling, and six PQs (1 per cent.) were answered between four weeks and three months of tabling. No PQs were answered more than three months after tabling.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many questions to his Department tabled for written answer on a named day during the session 1998–99 were answered (a) on or before a named day, (b) by within one week of a named day, (c) within one month of a named day, (d) within three months of a named day and (e) after three months of a named day. [106479]

Mr. Wills: We do not record this information in precisely the manner requested, but I am able to provide the following information:

During the Parliamentary session 1998–99, 965 PQs were tabled to the Department for answer on a named day. Of these 714 PQs (74 per cent.) were answered on the named day; 192 PQs (20 per cent.) were answered within one week of the named day; 50 PQs (5 per cent.) were answered between one week and four weeks of the named day; and nine PQs (1 per cent.) were answered between four weeks and three months of the named day. No PQs were answered more than three months after the named day.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total cost to his Department of the publication of his speeches since 1997. [107436]

Mr. Wills: All Departmental speeches are made available on request and free of charge. Since 1997, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has delivered over 200 speeches, a number of which have been made available on the DfEE's internet site. We estimate that the cost of publication is £24,000.

Research Contracts

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 10 January 2000, Official Report, columns 39–40W, what restrictions were placed on contractors carrying out research projects funded by his Department in 1999 in respect of them discussing their findings with journalists (a) before and (b) after publication. [108201]

Mr. Wills: The Department's research contracts place no restrictions on contractors discussing their findings with journalists before or after publication. DfEE research contracts include standard Confidentiality clauses designed to protect any third party confidentiality and to ensure the Department is kept informed of any advertising or promotional material involving its research findings.

Sure Start

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 386W on Sure Start, what are the local Sure Start Programme areas in the parliamentary constituencies of (a) Birkenhead, (b) Wirral South, (c) Wirral West and (d) Wallasey. [108349]

Yvette Cooper: There is one local Sure Start programme currently being developed in the Wirral. It is in north Birkenhead and cuts across the wards of Bidston and Birkenhead. This area falls within the parliamentary constituency of Birkenhead. There are no Sure Start programmes in the parliamentary constituencies of Wirral South, Wirral West, and Wallasey.

School Inspections

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, (1) pursuant to his answer of 31 January 2000, Official Report, column 421W, on school inspections, if he will place in the Library a copy of the analysis of the Ofsted/Audit Commission questionnaire replies from schools in Leeds, broken down by primary and secondary sectors; [108694]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 31 January 2000, Official Report, column 421W, on school inspections, if he will place in the Library a copy of the summary analysis of schools' views for each local education authority inspected by Ofsted to date. [108695]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, Chris Woodhead. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Libraries.

CABINET OFFICE

Anti-drugs Strategy

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress is being made in increasing the numbers of problem drug misusers in treatment. [109169]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government have allocated an additional £200 million over three years to provide treatment for drug misusers. We are beginning to see the effect of this investment in expansion of treatment services in prisons, the development of arrest referral schemes and the expansion of community-based drug treatment services.

One of the barriers to faster expansion is the shortage of suitably skilled staff and I have recently announced a major new recruitment campaign for drug workers, to begin in March. This campaign will be jointly funded by the Department of Health and the Home Office and we aim to recruit up to 300 new drug workers. We hope to attract people from a wide range of backgrounds, and we are ensuring that training will be available to enable the new drug workers to begin work as quickly as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Staff Bonuses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies spent in total on extra bonuses above usual payments for staff working over the new year period; what were the (a) maximum and (b) minimum bonuses paid; how many people received the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum payments; and if he will make a statement. [104489]

Mr. Hain: Some Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff were required to work over the Millennium to monitor international Millennium related development, provide consular, press and communications services and to check FCO IT and other systems worldwide.

To compensate staff for working over the period, bank holiday overtime rates payable in the United Kingdom were increased by 50 per cent. Shift disturbance allowance and on-call allowances were also enhanced. Staff in grades not normally eligible for overtime payments received a special payment of £27.50 per hour worked. About 130 staff will receive these various payments.

Staff employed in the non-departmental public bodies for which the FCO is responsible received comparable treatment.

FCO staff serving overseas do not qualify for overtime or shift allowance payments. They received no additional payments.

It is not possible to provide full cost details, since individual line managers are responsible for authorising overtime payments from their budgets and the payments are still being processed.

I should like to pay tribute to the efforts of all FCO staff to ensure that the Department's business was carried on as normal and that the coverage of developments abroad over the period went smoothly and efficiently.

European Commission

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to respond formally to the Commission's Consultation Document, "Reforming the Commission". [107361]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 31 January 2000, Official Report, column 408W.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Montserrat

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Montserrat Government concerning the return of residents to exclusion zones. [108146]

Clare Short: Island residents are not permitted in the Exclusion Zone by order of the Governor, under his Emergency Powers. The Governor takes regular advice from scientists and the Volcano Executive Group. Following the last scientific assessment (December 1999) there is no immediate prospect of residents being allowed to return to live in the excluded areas.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what reports she has received of the long-term health risks to residents in Montserrat in areas affected by volcanic ash containing high percentages of cristobalite; [108141]

(2) what reports she has received on the effect on the health of residents of ash deposits in Montserrat. [108142]

Clare Short: My Department has commissioned and received a number of reports from a Consultant Occupational Physician at the University of Cambridge. These include a report of research carried out on respiratory function and asthma in children (April 1998), one describing the health hazards of volcanic ash in areas south of the Belham Valley (July 1999), and health risk annexes to Scientific and Hazard Assessment reports received over the last two years, the latest in December 1999.

Future reports will include (i) the outcomes of two toxicological studies on the long-term effects of exposure to volcanic ash (ii) conclusions on the respiratory health of Montserratians on island and (iii) estimates of the long-term effects and health risks associated with cristobalite in volcanic ash.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what health checks have been provided for Montserratians in (i) Montserrat and (ii) the UK following their exposure to ash. [108140]

Clare Short: We organised health checks for all Montserratians evacuated to the UK under the HMG sponsored evacuation arrangements. Follow-up checks are under consideration. The Government of Montserrat's Environmental Health Department regularly monitor ash levels both on the ground and in the air. In addition, we have agreed in principle to fund a study by the Institute of Occupational Medicine on the respiratory health and exposure to volcanic dust of Montserratian residents.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent reports she has received of activity levels of the Saufoiere Hills volcano in Montserrat. [108143]

Clare Short: We receive weekly reports from the Montserrat Volcano Observatory. The volcano's new dome began to grow in November 1999 and now has an estimated volume of 16 million cubic metres. The rate of growth is similar to that associated with the 1997 eruption. Resumed magma ascent reinforces the need for sustained and vigilant monitoring. The December 1999 Scientific and Hazards Assessment Report concluded there are no immediate risks outside the Exclusion Zone.

Oath of Allegiance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many letters she has received since 1 May 1997 on (a) constituency matters and (b) other matters of Government policy from each of those Members of the House who have not taken the Oath of Allegiance. [108405]

Clare Short: This information cannot be provided on the basis that correspondence between MPs and Departments is treated in confidence unless the originating MP chooses to make such issues public.

Charities

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of the aid budget was channelled through charities with an annual turnover of less than £1 million in each of the last three years. [106438]

Clare Short: We provided a total of £167 million through 233 UK charities in the financial year 1996–97, a total of £172 million through 223 UK charities in 1997–98, and a total of £182 million through 209 UK charities in 1998–99.

Full details of DFID's expenditure appear in "Statistics on International Development", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Information on disbursement to charities with an annual turnover of less than £1 million is not held centrally.

Chechnya

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is providing to Chechnyan refugees; and if she will make a statement. [108640]

Clare Short: We have so far contributed £500,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) appeal for the North Caucasus, and $1,450,000 (£893,000) to the UN Inter Agency Appeal for internally displaced people in the North Caucasus, split between the World Food Programme ($1,000,000), the United Nations Children's Fund ($250,000), the World Health Organisation ($100,000) and the UN Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs ($100,000). The UK has also contributed through our share of the 2.2 million euro donated by the EU (Primarily to UNHCR (1 million euro) and ICRC (1 million euro)). We are monitoring the humanitarian situation closely.

GM Crops

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what projects her Department has supported which involved the growing of genetically modified crops. [108391]

Clare Short: A list of the projects and a briefing on the approach of my Department to genetically modified crops have been sent to my hon. Friend and placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 1999-2000
CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 343 Index pp1-53 (A-ZIM) 24 January - 4 February 2000

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 343

SESSION 1999–2000

24th January—4th February 2000

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
